Middlebury in the News

Professor John P. Davidson (left) has retired after being a member of the Middlebury faculty for 34 years. Before the close of the past academic year a testimonial dinner was held for Professor Davidson. President Samuel S. Stratton and Fred P. Lang, Treasurer of the College are shown (above) at the head table with Professor Davidson.

Dr. Stratton read the following resolution passed by the College's Board of Trustees: The President and Fellows of Middlebury College express their deep gratitude for the thirty-four years of loyal and devoted service which Professor John Perley Davidson has given to the College since his first appointment as Assistant Professor of History in 1923. A graduate of Tufts College in 1919, he received two Master of Arts degrees, one from Tufts College and one from the University of Minnesota. He was promoted to the rank of Associate Professor here in 1932, and is now retiring as Professor and Chairman of the History Department. His specialization in English, European and Contemporary World History has been deep and thorough. He is admired by students and colleagues for his broad scholarly interests, and for his discriminating attention to the significance of historical events. He has been a wise and patient counselor of our students, and a stimulus to academic endeavor. The best wishes of the entire College go with him, for much happiness in his vocations and avocations of the coming years.

Teaching In England. . .

Teaching for a year in London, has proved a gratifying experience for Dr. Pardon E. Tillinghast, of the Middlebury faculty who taught in England during the past academic year under the Fulbright Exchange Program.

Dr. Tillinghast made a change from college teaching to a public (private in the United States) secondary school in London where he enjoyed teaching and living.

The major difference he found in the British educational system is the separation of children at an early age according to their ability and the emphasis on speeding the progress of the brighter ones. He has reservations about the value of this system, but he feels United States schools could do more to help the brighter students.

Dr. Tillinghast had assumed that British children were better behaved than their American counterparts, he has been surprised to find this is not the case.

He agrees with the observation of another American exchange teacher that Great Britain caters to her top 25 per cent in education and doesn't do enough for the 75 per cent. He says the United States does not do enough for the top 25 per cent.

Dr. Tillinghast's students, all boys at the City of London School, range in age from 12 to 17. He taught history, English and French.

From the age of 12 or 13, the boys are divided into streams graded from A to E. The boys in the top streams get more subjects and move faster. Those

News of Alumnae Clubs

The Boston Club has a successful year behind it with the gifts of three $350 scholarships given to undergraduates of Middlebury. The Club plans to have a tea honoring incoming Freshman women from around the Boston area on September 12 at the home of Janice Alwill Jackson '30. Elizabeth Cady Simmons '29 will be in charge of arrangements. As a new venture, the Club plans a "brunch" on the first Saturday morning in October for all recent graduates, with a special welcome to those newly arrived in the Boston area. Seniors of '57 are specially invited to join in the fun!

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Harriet Myers Fish '16; Vice-President: Mary Williams Brackett '36; Corresponding Secretary: Donna Curtis Maxson '47; Recording Secretary: Katherine Craven '46; Treasurer: Natalie Richards '50; Assistant Treasurer: Jean Taggart Lindblad '47.

The Cleveland Club had a very successful year with their decorated candle project. It sold over $1500 worth of candles at its March Sale. The Club had a picnic for all members and families and Alumni in Cleveland area, on July 14. This group is still small and very interested in new members.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Mrs. Virginia Wynn Wood '43; Vice-President: Miss Barbara Brailey '52; Secretary Recording: Louise Limbach Spangler '53; Corresponding Secretary: Diana Carroll Tollner '51; Treasurer: Muriel Mack Lamppert '47; Alumnae Council Representative: Mrs. Dorothy Nash Brailey '19; Project Chairman: Charlotte Clark Hay '51; Publicity Chairman: Audrey Leland Donaldson '48.

The Westchester Club tried a new type of party this year. It was a "Husband and Wife Bridge and Poker Party." Barbara Busing Harris held one at her home with seven couples in attendance. Twelve dollars was raised toward the Dean's Purse and it was decided to use these parties more in the future to take place of the Scotch Auction. There was considerable enthusiasm shown at the Fall joint meeting at the Roger Smith Hotel at which time Bobo Sheehan, college ski coach, spoke on the Olympics at Cortina. The group is very much in favor of having more joint get togethers with the husbands and male alumni.

Officers for 1957–58 are: President: Jean Sloan Briggs '49; Vice-President: Jean Retallick Gouert '49; Treasurer: Mary Bidwell Ouimette '43; Corresponding Secretary: Martha Belden Jackson '52; Recording Secretary: Ann Curry Munier '46; Publicity Chairman: Dottie Laux O'Brien '45.

The Hartford Club had a successful year with hard work being devoted to its Scholarship Bridge to raise money for its annual scholarships to be given this coming year to a senior woman. This group had a variation of meetings with a profitable auction and ending with the usual May Breakfast held at the home of Olivet M. Beckwith in West Hartford, at which meeting Miss Barbara Wells, Director of Admissions for Women was guest.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Lois Brigham Selnau '47; Vice-President: Judith Phinney Stearns '56; Secretary: Joan Allen Armour '51; Treasurer: Frances L. Mullans '33; Alumnae Delegates: Virginia A. Knox '30; Charlotte P. Hickcox '45.

The Long Island Club had a good year with a Bridge for the benefit of the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Fund. It also had a joint dinner with alumni which was a great success.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Nancy Weale McGuire '48; Vice-President: Susan Taylor '53; Corresponding Secretary: Kathryn Pauley Baldwin '50; Secretary Treasurer: Ruth Durland Fyfe '49.

The Manhattan Club worked hard this year and sent a $100 contribution to the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Fund. The group continues to grow in numbers and enthusiasm. It also supports the Dean's Purse.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Mary Henseler Cassidy '31; Vice-President: Barbara Abel '45; Recording Secretary: Ruth Collins '45; Corresponding Secretary: Patricia Perkins Cosgrove '49 and Alice De Lorenzo '47; Treasurer: Marilyn Bruhn '47; Alumnae Representative: Martha Jean Conklin '45.

The Burlington Club this year supported the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Fund, and had a successful year with a varied program.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Dorothy Stewart Stein '43; Vice-President: Barbara Knapp Bull '49; Recording Secretary: Jean Milligan '44; Corresponding Secretary: Evelyn Clement Green '32; Treasurer: Marilyn Campbell Foss '50.

The Worcester Club had a good turnout at its regular and Bi-Annual Alumni-Alumnae Dinner at the Hickory House. The chairmen for the event were Miss Constance Sherman and Edward Yerow. Over 70 people attended including husbands. Professor Reginald Cook spoke at the last meeting of the Club about Robert Frost and his poems. Mrs. Harry G. Smith (Suzanne Clark, '52) was in charge of dinner arrangements. The Club generously supported the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Fund this year in addition to its usual scholarship given to a Worcester County student.

Officers for 1957–58 include: President: Miss Constance Sherman '52; Vice-President: Marcia McIntire Allen '52; Recording Secretary: Jane Miller Sullivan '49; Corresponding Secretary: Jean Holmberg Sutherland '49; Treasurer: Suzanne Clark Smith '52; Auditor: Miss Lucy Roberts '35; Scholarship Chairman: Miss Kathleen Kirby '24.

The Alumnae Association of New Jersey reports that the three regional clubs continue to function successfully in specific areas. Overall activities are coordinated through an executive board consisting of three elected officers plus representatives from each club. Officers for the coming year are as follows:

Morris and Essex Club: President: Janet Lang Krumm '41; Vice-President: Jane Giblin Langey '42; Secretary-Treasurer: Priscilla Bowerman Gentile '34; Corresponding Secretary: Hedwig Tafelmaier Stark '50; Publicity Chairman: Deborah Nye Eppler '50; Hospitality Chairman: Constance Linde Olinder '43; Representative to Nominating Committee: Ruby Reeve Magnuson '37; Alumnae Council Representative: Janet Lang Krumm '41.

Dean Ross Chapter: (Re-elected last year's slate of officers)—President: Lura Hallett Smith '50; Vice-President: (vacancy due to move of Patricia Riley Sweeney '49 to Brazil); Secretary-Treasurer: Lois Gillette Thorkilsen '40; Corresponding Secretary: Phyllis C. Noble '45; Program Chairman: Marilyn Mackie Frankenbach '53; Representative to Nominating Committee: Margaret Ferry Morris '43; Alumnae Council Representative: Ruth Hardy Scheidecker '41. Commencement Weekend Scene Of Several Class Reunions

WITH classes in attendance spanning more than a half a century, the Alumni Reunion Luncheon on Saturday of Commencement Weekend enjoyed a nearly record crowd of 1300 Alumni-ae, friends and parents of members of the Class of 1957. Classes returning to the campus for reunions included—1907, 1912, 1917, 1922, 1927, 1932, 1937, 1942, 1947 and 1952.

Key points highlighting the Luncheon Program in the Memorial Field House were: The awarding of plaques for meritorious service by Alumni and Alumnae to the College; announcement of newly elected Alumni-ae officers; presentation of the McCullough and LaFlamme Cups; and, the report on the 1957 Alumni Fund (please see Page 31).

The McCullough Cup for the highest percentage of living members present at Commencement Alumni Day was awarded to the 50th Anniversary Class of 1907.

The men and women of the Class of 1907 shared in receiving the LaFlamme Bowl (awarded to the class group with the highest participation in the 1956–57 Alumni Fund) with the men of 1882–90, men of 1900, 1902, 1903, 1905, 1906, and the women of 1903 and 1904.

In recognition of meritorious service to Middlebury, traditional pewter plaques were presented to: Dr. Charles J. Lyon, '18, head of the Botany Dept. at Dartmouth College; Linwood B. Law, '21, of the Buffalo, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce and current President of the Vermont Society of Buffalo (Mr. Law was unable to be present for the formal presentation of the plaques.)

Also receiving plaques were—Mrs. Pruda Harwood Wiley, '12, and Mrs. Hazel McLeod Wills, '09.

Citations accompanying the awards stated:

Charles J. Lyon, '18,—"graduated from Middlebury as valedictorian of his class and was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He received his Masters and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard in Biology. Ever since graduating from Middlebury he has been very active in the field of education. As Professor of Botany at Dartmouth College he is a most popular member of the faculty and his courses are well attended by the undergraduates. He is very unselfish about the amount of time he gives to the undergraduate in counseling and advising. Dr. Lyon has been class secretary for many years and has kept his class close together by his annual class letters. As Dinner Chairman for the Upper Connecticut Valley he has been responsible for many successful Alumni Dinners. In 1951 he was elected Alumni Trustee and during the five years he was in this position he contributed a great deal to the Board. We take great pleasure in presenting you this plaque for meritorious service to your college.

Linwood B. Law, '21—". . . has been associated with the Buffalo Junior and Senior Chambers of Commerce in executive capacities since 1928. His active interest in civic affairs has included membership in many local organizations. [Continued on page 25]

New Benefits

Starting with the current fiscal year on July 1st, Middlebury College is making available to its faculty and administrative staff additional group life insurance benefits. They are being given a unit of decreasing life insurance. This is designed to produce greatest benefits in the early years of an academic career, decreasing as earning power grows year by year and dependents become self-supporting. Under this plan the death benefit including dividends of one unit for a man of 25 is over $5,000, decreasing to $450 at age 64. The plan is written with the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America.

in the lower categories seem rebellious and bored and nearly all drop out at 15 or 16, he says.

He says that one of the ablest masters has not used a cane in fifteen years. But he believes the British system is more authoritarian and puts less emphasis on guidance than the American.

Dr. Tillinghast said he had resorted to the cane—a common practice here—with the utmost reluctance after he had concluded it was expected of him.

Alumni interested in the weekly activities of the College may wish to consider subscribing to the "Campus," undergraduate newspaper. Subscription rate is $3.50 a year. Cornerstone Laying Ceremony Marks Naming of Stewart Hall

THE cornerstone for Stewart Hall, new men's residence hall, was laid by Dr. Samuel S. Stratton and Mrs. Charles M. Swift in the late spring.

The new dormitory, located on the upper campus next to Hepburn Hall, is named after the Stewart family whose affiliation with Middlebury is almost as long as the complete history of the College. Over the years, eleven members of the family have studied at Middlebury, four have received honorary degrees from Middlebury and five of its members have served as Trustees of Middlebury with a service totaling 183 years.

Mrs. Swift, who represented the Stewart family, is the daughter of John W. Stewart who graduated from Middlebury in 1846 and served as Trustee from 1858 to 1915. He was one of Vermont's great governors and one of the mementos placed in the cornerstone box by Mrs. Swift was a written account of the convention of 1860 which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. Governor Stewart was the leader of the Vermont delegation at this convention and his report had great historical significance since it was Vermont that led the New England states in voting for Lincoln.

Mrs. Swift's husband, the late Charles May Swift, was a Trustee of Middlebury from 1918 to 1929. Her uncle, Joseph Battell of the Class of 1860, was a generous supporter of Middlebury during his lifetime and gave to the College the mountain campus at Bread Loaf at which is now located the Snow Bowl and the Bread Loaf campus. Mrs. Swift and her brother, Mr. Philip Stewart of Colorado Springs, Colorado, are the only brother and sister to ever receive honorary degrees from Middlebury.

At the ceremony, the Alumni were represented by Gordon C. Perine '49, who placed in the cornerstone box a copy of the Alumni Fund report and the current issue of THE NEWS LETTER. Dr. Stratton, representing the College, placed in the box a copy of the current College catalogue and Mr. Egbert C. Hadley '10, Chairman of the Board, placed in the cornerstone box Minutes of the Trustees' meeting authorizing the naming of the new building.

The new dormitory will house 152 men in double rooms and contains an apartment suite for a faculty resident. It will have all modern facilities necessary to provide comfortable and pleasant living quarters for students.

Construction is proceeding smoothly with a large share of the native limestone exterior already set and it is expected to be ready for occupancy when College opens in September. It is being financed by a long term Federal Government loan on a self-amortizing basis.

Letters

Sir:

I note from the Spring Issue of the NEWS LETTER that only one no-hit game was on record for a Middlebury College baseball team. It seemed to me that Frank Towne, '26, originally of Fair Haven, Vt., might feel like the forgotten man if at least one alumnus did not write you about the "no-hit, no-run, no-reach game" which Frank pitched for Middlebury in the spring of 1923. This was during Frank's freshman year at Middlebury, and I sat in the stands and watched the drama and excitement and suspense of this game until the final out which brought a perfect game shut-out to the College.

MURRAY HOYT, '26

Sir:

In the last issue of the NEWS LETTER I read that a celebration was planned in commemoration of "the only no-hit baseball game in Middlebury history" pitched by a Middlebury man in 1915. This statement is contrary to fact, as while I was a student I watched Frank Towne during Junior Week in 1923 pitch not only a no-hit game but a perfect game; not a single man reaching first base in nine innings. It is a coincidence that this game was also played against St. Lawrence University, and a former Middlebury student, Red Gannon, was catching for the opposition.

This feat attained wide publicity in the newspapers throughout the East, and obviously somebody has erred in quoting the statement before mentioned, and with all due respect to the game described in 1915, Frank Towne's game was obviously even more outstanding.

Incidentally, this man was one of the great ball players in Middlebury history. Not only did he pitch a perfect game but, in 1924, when we were at least ten to one underdogs, Frank Towne held Vermont 0 to 0 in ten innings. This was in the days when Vermont was a baseball power.

$7,975.52 Contributed To 1957 Parents Fund

The Parents Fund achieved an all-time high this year, Mr. and Mrs. William Upson, Co-Chairmen, reported with the close of the College Year.

This year's Fund totaled $7,975.52 and was made possible by 212 generous parent donors. Last year's Fund included 185 donors whose total contributions amounted to $5,317.50.

In reporting the record total of the Parents Fund to President Stratton, Mr. Upson commented "I wish it could be possible for Mrs. Upson and myself to thank each of the donors personally. We both enjoyed working with them on the Parents Fund and we were greatly impressed with the generous interest they showed all year as manifested by the

The Middlebury Doctrine
Or: Leaving the Oysters at the Crossroads*

By Eric Johnston

When your President, Dr. Stratton, graciously invited me to speak at your commencement this year, I was both flattered and somewhat troubled. You have—each of you—neared the end of America's full-course blue-plate special of education, sixteen long years of lecturing by your elders from first grade to graduation. And here, at the end of it all, I am brought out and served up as your final educational dessert. This, of course, is highly flattering to me. But it's also a little troubling.

For one thing, I know that you are still a captive audience and will be captive until you get out of town with your diplomas. For another, I know that you are at this moment over-brimming with specific information from the whole vast field of learning. Facing an audience that is both captive and highly informed puts an alarming burden of proof on any speaker.

Before coming here, I cast about for a suitable commencement theme. The two safest themes I could think of were almost inescapable. At least few commencement audiences in my lifetime have escaped them. The first safe theme is that "The World Is Your Oyster." You know how it goes. Your parents have given you a world so bountiful that you can scarcely miss finding the pearls.

The second safe theme is that "You're Now At the Crossroads." You've reached the moment of decision, this commencement talk says, and then rushes you pell-mell down a series of trails, turnpikes, detours and superhighways—and leaves you exhausted and still at the crossroads at the end of the oratorical trip.

I decided against both of these themes—I decided to leave the oysters at the crossroads for some other commencement—because I came across a far better idea in one of Middlebury's own publications. It's a brief statement of what Middlebury sets out to accomplish and why. I think it is worth reading and talking about on this commencement afternoon. The statement says:

"Middlebury is a liberal arts college which aims to prepare students for living as well as for a livelihood. It has no technical, professional, or industrial schools, and does not encourage the enrollment of students who are interested solely in vocational education. Middlebury believes that the lawyer who knows nothing but the law, the technician whose concern is only with his special skills, and the businessman who is unmindful of larger economic and social issues, are perhaps prepared for earning a good living but are not necessarily prepared for leading a full life . . ."

This statement, I believe, sets forth magnificently the purpose of education and the purpose of the educated man in our world today. What it says and says clearly is that education should prepare for living, not merely livelihood—that it should provide knowledge, not merely know-how.

With this doctrine, Middlebury offers a good bit more than a pleasant platitude, appropriate for academic discussion and suitable for framing. The Middlebury Doctrine—which is the doctrine of true education—presents a vital lesson for all Americans.

Why is true education—the Middlebury Doctrine—so important to us today? Education has always been our chief rudder of society, our delicate stabilizer in stormy seas. At all times, society depends on education for its bearings. In times of great stress and change, society's dependence is very great.

Now every graduating class from the first disciples of Socrates believed that it grew up in times of change and challenge. But your generation, I submit, has grown up in an era distinguished by change itself—economic, social and political change.

And in all this panoply of change, the greatest for us was the sudden thrusting of world leadership—unsought and also unavoidable—upon the United States.

If ever a nation needed a Middlebury Doctrine, it is now—in our own time . . . in our own country. For education that is truly outgoing, that liberates men for living and communicating in a changing world, is the only channel through which we can find new ways and new ideas to meet the new conditions required of our leadership. Because our future as a nation rests on liberated men, on our quality for leadership, we must guard against any tendency that restricts and limits and makes men hidebound.

I would like to mention one such tendency this afternoon—the tendency to over-concentrate and over-worry about the specialized mind.

*Commencement Address by Mr. Johnston, President, Motion Picture Association of America, at Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vermont on Monday afternoon, June 10, 1957.

Honorary Degrees were awarded to: Sherman Adams, Assistant to President Eisenhower, Doctor of Laws; Mrs. Hilda Woodruff Gollnick, '22, a leader in civic, cultural, and educational affairs in Australia, Doctor of Humane Letters; Rev. Stuart C. Haskins, Pastor of the Community Church of Great Neck, N. Y., Doctor of Divnity; Eric A. Johnston, President of the Motion Picture Association of America, Doctor of Laws; Sidney Painter of Johns Hopkins University (daughter Ann Forbes Painter was a member of the graduating class), Doctor of Laws; Howard A. Rusk, Chairman of the Dept. of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at the Medical Center of New York University, Doctor of Science; Raymond J. Saulnier, '29, Economic Adviser to President Eisenhower, Doctor of Laws.

Sherman Adams—"Distinguished classmate, Vermont is proud that it can claim you as a native son, but we concede that it was in our sister state across the river that you were educated. There you established yourself as a successful business man of complete integrity. There unaided and untainted by political fanfare, you rose from lower echelons in the public service to crusade in forthright fashion for causes you found just and for a truly great man in whom you put your faith. Today, as the trusted friend and assistant to the President of the United States, with great courage, intelligence, and efficiency you labor without stint to bring to fruition with dispatch the domestic and foreign policies of our national government."

Hilda Woodruff Gollnick—"Graduate of Middlebury College; wife of a Rhodes Scholar, Middlebury graduate and classmate; mother of a Middlebury graduate. You perhaps with a woman's innate wisdom arranged that husband and son should be the only Phi Beta Kappa members of your own Middlebury family. In honoring you today, we take cognizance of the esteem in which you are held by civic and cultural leaders in your adopted home, land of Australia. With high intelligence and gracious good will, you have worked in the ranks and in top echelons for service of cultural causes. Although always loyal to your American citizenship, you have deservingly won the affection and gratitude of our friends of another continent. You exemplify in highest degree the attributes of a liberally educated woman . . ."

Stuart Campbell Haskins—"Middlebury was founded by men of high Christian principle dedicated to the support of church as well as education. Since the days of our founders, the College for now more than a hundred and fifty years has sent forth graduates to the Christian ministry. It is for good reason, therefore, that we choose to do honor today to a native of New England who is without thought of self, devoting his life to the spiritual well-being of his fellow men. We invited you to join our distinguished honorary alumni because with indefatigable energy, with patience and wisdom and with deep understanding of the frailties and virtues of mankind, you have faithfully ministered to the needs of your congregations. By the example of your life and the sincerity of your preaching, you give inspiration and confidence to your parishioners. . . ."

Sidney Painter—"You bear the name of one of our founding fathers for whom we have named a dormitory and a song. Your daughter, who has just earned her Middlebury degree the hard way, was a representative of the College when tribute was paid at Fort Ticonderoga to our Gamaliel Painter, her ancestor and yours. This is pleasing to us, but we honor you today as an eminent classical scholar, neither intimidated nor discouraged by the present glamour of the scientist; as a distinguished professor and defender of the liberal arts; and as one who has come to understand and to live the meaning of the words 'and gladly teach'. . . ."

Howard A. Rusk—"Brilliant scholar and for many years successful practitioner of internal medicine, you have unselfishly chosen to direct your outstanding abilities to the medical education of both students and laymen. Of more close concern to those with broken bodies and crushed spirits, veterans and civilians, at home and far away places, your skill, your leadership, your devotion to their rehabilitation has restored their hopes and returned them to normal lives. For your distinguished career dedicated to the relief of man's infirmities, you have received many honors. . . ."

Raymond J. Saulnier—"Whether or not as a young Middlebury graduate in Economics you forecast the now historic financial collapse which so soon followed your commencement of 1929 is not in our records of your distinguished career. It is for all to read, however, that you diligently and brilliantly continued to combine scholarship and sound judgement in the study, teaching, and application of economic theories and techniques. Your qualification as an outstanding economist, endowed with passion for objectivity, could not escape the attention of the President of the United States. We honor you today as President Eisenhower's chief economic adviser with the knowledge that you have the intelligence, technical skill and courage to execute without bias, and with competence, and integrity the tremendous responsibility vested in your high office and in you. . . ."

Eric A. Johnston—"In young manhood competent to an extraordinary degree in affairs of business; in maturity an outstanding industrial leader, you have nevertheless unselfishly turned public servant whenever called upon, as you have been most recently by President Eisenhower. Patient architect of plans for bringing order out of chaos in the Middle East, we honor you today for the integrity, the initiative, and the high order of intelligence you bring to this task of such bewildering frustration, yet of such profound urgency. . . ."

The specialist, of course, is needed in our complex, technological society. It is true that we need skilled engineers to build jet planes, nuclear power plants, automatic factories. We need trained men in industry, in trade, in all the sciences.

The Soviet Union, we're told repeatedly, is at this moment getting ahead of us. The Soviet Union, we're told, is producing engineers by the gross lot and if we don't redouble our efforts overnight, our goose will be thoroughly cooked—if not burned to a crisp.

Maybe so, but I doubt it. I, for one, submit that it is foolhardy to use Soviet education to club American education over the head. The Soviets have created a system of education for specialists—each student shaped for a pre-shaped destiny. But the destination of Soviet education, insofar as the Kremlin can control it, is still intellectual slavery. The Kremlin's great concern is how to regiment young minds to eliminate non-conformity, how to stimulate young minds just so far—to build a nuclear reactor, say, but not to explode and atomize a tyranny.

For us, therefore, isn't it high time to recognize and honor the greatest product of education—the free-roving, the curious, the liberated mind? Isn't it high time to discard such labels as "egghead" for the intellectual; "offbeat" for the individual; "trouble-maker" for the maverick? Isn't it high time to recognize the generalist—as well as the specialist—as absolutely vital to our society?

Today, as never before, we require men and women of knowledge and broad talents to blend the specialties of learning, to orchestrate the technical skills of our society. We need them in government, in world affairs, in trade, in business. We need the leaders . . . the conductors . . . as well as the oboe players of democracy.

And we need them especially to advance our major task—the task of understanding and communicating with other peoples on our increasingly close-knit globe. We need better communication between peoples to clear through the thorny underbrush of shibboleths and stereotypes, to penetrate and understand cultures, religions, traditions and languages different from our own.

Among the great instruments for mutual understanding today are the mass communications media—among them the press, broadcasting, motion pictures. At first, I had some reluctance about including my own industry—motion pictures—in your commencement talk. I felt you might consider me unduly immodest. And then I came across a program from another Middlebury commencement—back in 1802, two years after your school was founded. The choice item on that program—following a Greek oration, a Latin oration and a handful of colloquys—was this topic: "Are Theaters Beneficial?" I imagine that this question was decided in the affirmative—or you wouldn't have invited me here today.

Now Hollywood and the motion pictures have a tradition too, although nowhere nearly as long as Middlebury's .This year marks Hollywood's Golden Anniversary. In the fifty years since 1907, Hollywood has probably done some foolish things, perhaps some unnecessary things, maybe some things as excessive as our industry's own adjectives. But Hollywood has also done some really magnificent things and I would like to tell you this afternoon about Hollywood's role as a communicator for America both at home and abroad.

Frankly, there has been no other man-made device to equal it—from Gutenberg's movable type up to, and including, Dr. Zworykin's television tube. Hollywood, moreover, didn't set out to communicate with a capital C—it merely wished to entertain. It didn't plan to advance and advertise America's productivity, or culture, or even our democratic way of life. But it did so and it still does so as an unintended by-product of its intended mission of entertainment.

Hollywood has communicated—and educated—in two principal areas:—first, as a stimulator of mass production—the assembly line . . . and, second, as the tireless agent of the democratic ideal throughout the world.

In Hollywood's half century the industrial revolution fulfilled its golden promise in the United States. In these fifty years, we created a great interdependent economy with jobs and incomes enabling all men to share in society's own tangible wealth—the products and services that man himself can produce.

It was this accomplishment of our people's capitalism which Karl Marx—of the non-Hollywood Marxes—failed to prophesy or comprehend. It was this accomplishment which today so perplexes the rigid followers of Karl Marx, who have little to offer or share but mass oppression, mass poverty and mass discontent. For America's great economic strength was founded on two "masses" which the unfunny Marx never really understood—mass production based upon, energized by, and successful in meeting mass demand.

ALUMNI in the Headlines

Dick Godfrey, '52, Following In Famed Dad's Footsteps

TV King's Son Is Radio Announcer in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO—Dick Godfrey, '52, son of Arthur Godfrey, is adding a second generation glow to a famous name through his work as a radio sportscaster in the San Francisco Bay area.

His rise to prominence and popularity has been so gradual and normal that many fans are not consciously aware of his august heritage. They just take him for granted as another staff announcer who has made good.

As KCBS sports co-ordinator, he voices the daily "6 O'Clock Spotlight" and conducts a two-hour Saturday afternoon "West Coast Grandstand" Program with frequent network pickups in the manner of "Monitor."

He supervises all sports activities for CBS in Northern California, co-ordinates the network's exclusive radio broadcasts of Stanford University sports, and voices the "color" for these and other college and professional games while Don Klein does "play-by-play."

He conducts a "This Week in Stanford Sports" program during football and basketball seasons, and was voicing a nightly sports roundup until KCBS boss Henry Untermeyer decided, "We can't work Dick from 9 in the morning until 10:30 at night, every day."

Didn't Plan Career

Dick didn't plan to be a sportscaster. It just happened that way.

While attending Middlebury College in Vermont, he married Claire Joanne Malmros, a Middlebury coed. They now have a 5-year-old daughter, Diane.

After graduation, Dick worked for a year as a tire salesman and decided he wanted to try radio. He asked his father for advice and Arthur said:

"Go see Art Hayes. He knows more about radio than [Continued on page 27]

JOYCE GREENE, '52

Miss Joyce E. Greene, '52, French teacher at Andrew Wards High School and Lincoln School, Fairfield, Conn., has been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship for a year's study in France during the 1957–58 school year, it was announced recently. Miss Greene resides at 289 Old Mill Road, Fairfield. She was selected for the scholarship on the basis of demonstrated scholastic and professional ability and on her "tact, adaptability, emotional stability and integrity."

Miss Greene was a member of a working committee sponsored by the Modern Language Association of America which prepared a curriculum guide for French in grade four last year and is currently working on one for grade five.

FRANK HOBSON, '38

Frank E. Hobson, Jr., '38, has been appointed Dean of the Faculty and Head of the Humanities Department of Dean Academy and Junior College in Franklin, Mass.

Mr. Hobson received his Bachelor's and Master's degrees from Middlebury College, and has taken graduate work at Harvard, Brown University and the University of Connecticut. He will receive his Doctor of Education from Columbia University upon the completion of his thesis requirement.

He has served as head of the English Department since 1948 and been Dean of Westbrook (Me.) Junior College since 1952. Earlier experience includes instruction at Williston Academy, Haverhill High School, Plattsburgh (N. Y.) Teachers College and Plainfield (Conn.) High School.

Mr. Hobson is Secretary-Treasurer of the New England Junior College Council and a member of the National Council of Teachers of English and the College English Association. He is married, father of four children, and makes his home in Franklin.

ROBERT COOK, '30

Robert B. Cook, '30, has been appointed the new principal for the Watertown High School, Watertown, Mass. Mr. Cook will assume his new duties in September, 1957. He has been assistant principal of the high school for the past twelve years and has also taught Physical Education, Guidance and English besides coaching the school's athletic teams. Mr. Cook has been a teacher in the Watertown School System for twenty-three years. He was graduated from Middlebury with a B.S. degree and received his Master of Arts degree at New York University. He lives with his wife and two children at Litchfield Road in Watertown.

the PRESIDENT'S Page

IT IS INDEED a pleasure to devote the President's Page of this Summer Issue of the News Letter to excerpts from the excellent Baccalaureate Address entitled The Courage to Live given by the Reverend C. Haskins of the Community Church, Great Neck, New York, in Mead Memorial Chapel during the Sunday morning of Commencement Weekend. Following are the excerpts from the Baccalaureate Address:

"The courage to live—really to live, fully to live . . . .Two words to begin with, to guide our thought. The first, one that gives us a purpose for life. . . . The second gives us the confidence of our endeavor. . . . Join together these two: that we are seeking to find life that is life indeed, and that with the right courage, we have 'what it takes' to seize the opportunity that is ours today to find it; and you have the heart of what I would illustrate for you this morning.

"Can you not see with me the present need for the ethics of courage? I am not sure that you who stand today at the threshold of your careers sense fully the opportunity of today.

"We humans have a great habit of referring the opportunities of life to some other time and place. We fancy there were some 'good old days' in the past when times were better. This is for the same reason that objects far off look enchanting, or the landscape takes on a new aspect when we view it through colored lenses.

"What times are we thinking of, what 'good old days?' One would expect it of my generation, the grads of thirty years ago, for we've grown more than a bit tired; you can understand it if we feel sentimental and wistful about the days of our youth. But we know it is all an illusion—that these were the good old days; it is mostly that we have grown older and more tired, that we are less able to see the good in these days that are with us now. . . .

"For yourselves, what year in the past thirty-five would you have preferred starting out in the world? Your parents left college in the unsettled days of the 1920's that followed the first World War. The grads of twenty-five years ago came out in the trough of the great world-wide depression when college trained men sold lead pencils on Broadway. The men and women of fifteen years back were thrown into the vast dislocations of World War II; most of them endured its privations, and many suffered its tragic experiences. And it is but seven years since your older brothers and sisters went through it all over again in Korea. From such a background of the immediate past, a friend of mine whose judgment I highly value, a man prominent in the financial world, when I asked him what he would most like to say to a graduating class this year, put it: 'Tell them—you never had it so good!' Perhaps he was only saying that all attempts to discover some good old days with greater opportunities than our own are an illusion. . . .

"It is the part of good sense to recognize that all times are basically the same where opportunity is concerned. Opportunity, that is, for living life to the full. Are we to suppose that God is getting tired? that the universe is running down? that the Lord no longer holds out before us fulness of life under the same conditions with which he gave it to our fathers before us? We should turn from the thought of the good old days to ask: 'What of the great and challenging days in which we find ourselves?'

" . . . We all are always facing a new era; and we have to belong to it and must adjust ourselves to its demands. The ability to adjust is our endowment as men. It is up to ourselves. In the last analysis, what life takes—what it always has taken—is character. We are not helpless victims of circumstances. We are men and women and can still handle the conditions that are thrust upon us. It is the spirit of man, and above all, his courage, that is our basic resource as we face a changing world and changing times. Stout hearts, intelligently put to work, are still the power that make men equal to their time. . . .

"The courage needed for these days is one that says to us, first of all, 'Dare to be an individual. Be willing to be yourself.' To do this, you must come out of the crowd. Indeed, you will have to make deliberate attempt to break with the mores of the herd. For a major mark, and curse, of our time is our conformity. We have created the standardized automobile, and the standardized TV set, and the standardized electric refrigerator, and the standardized pre-fabricated house, and we are doing a pretty good job at turning out the standardized human being. Like cars coming off the assembly line, the folks furnish their houses in the same sort of way, read the books and periodicals everybody else reads, follow the favorite TV programs, and wear ideas and prejudices of the same tailoring. . . . Ours is the age of the mass and we petty men will be increasingly swallowed up and lose our identity in our collectivisms if we do not resist them somehow.

"Over against all this, there is a right sort of non-conformity. To save your soul, you must refuse to go along. If keeping up with the Joneses means that Bob Smith or Mary Parker is cheated out of a chance to be a real person, it's time they dropped out of the race. . . .

"For non-conformity, society whips you with its displeasure. Society likes people who keep in line; those who stand out are an implied criticism and a rebuke. It is far easier to keep in step with the crowd and forget about the desire to realize the ideal, to be a person. Many will interpret your aim as the whim of a crank or freak and will set you down as just another Bohemian.

"Actually, your aim will be something both simpler and better. For your interest in coming out of a crowd is not at all with putting on a show, making parade of anything at all—quite the reverse—but is prompted by a purpose to discover a reality deeper than conformity can ever bring you. Any one of us can go along with the crowd, can neglect those inner promptings that come to us now and then, and tell us what our occupations should be, can accept our pattern of life, of household expense, of amusement, from the advertisements in the popular periodicals, can go where the money is big and the earnings come easy. And we will have our reward. Also we will become like the great majority of the people of our land—without originality. We will have snuffed out the divine spark we might have shown the world because we did not dare to be ourself—to become what we could become. This is fear, this is meanness, to bury our talent in the earth and give it no chance to yield increase. . . .

"The courage to be an individual is that which enables us to do the unpopular thing. Now [Continued on page 26] over-all record has not been equalled by any other Phoenix Mutual Manager. The agency is one of the leaders in brokerage business in the New York metropolitan area and is staffed by an efficient group of associates whose long service records with Phoenix Mutual aggregate more than 116 years. Mr. Davis personally supervises all brokerage business and gives each case the benefit of his broad experience in life insurance underwriting.

Mr. Davis joined the Cleveland Agency of Phoenix as an agent on February 1, 1929 following six years of real estate selling. He has been active in life underwriting affairs and is a past President of the Midtown Managers Association and of the Lions Club of New York City. While at Middlebury College, Mr. Davis waited on tables and earned varsity letters in three different sports. Formerly an expert golfer, he now confines his athletic activities to hunting, fishing, and bowling.

WILBUR WEEKS, '47

Cambodians have an intense desire to learn English, according to Wilbur F. Weeks, '47, who has returned to the United States after two years of service with the U. S. Information Agency in Cambodia.

As a result, Mr. Weeks says, English-teaching has become one of the most important functions of the agency's post in the Cambodian province of Battambang.

Mr. Weeks, who helped to establish USIA's post there, reports that the demand for English lessons was so great, he and his wife conducted classes after working hours. As the agency's provincial public affairs officer in Battambang, Mr. Weeks supervised film showings, exhibits, and library activities.

Then Weeks returned to this country with a token of esteem from a Buddhist leader, a carved stone head which was presented to the USIA officer in appreciation of his services in Battambang.

Mr. Weeks, was formerly a vice consul with the Department of State in Austria and Japan. He will take a three-month training course at the Foreign Service Institute in Washington before returning overseas for USIA.

LAWRENCE MAHAR, '41

Lawrence R. Mahar, '41 meteorologist-in-charge of the Hartford-Springfield U. S. Weather Station, Bradley Field, has been presented with the Department of Commerce's Meritorious Service Award.

Mr. Mahar, father of three children, received the award in "recognition of his extremely competent performance of duties since entering the weather service in 1946 and particularly for valuable contributions through the development and expansion of the forecasting and public service program at the Hartford-Springfield office." In 1946 he transferred to the central office at Washington where he was engaged in a program to improve working facilities at weather field offices. He received the appointment as meteorologist-in-charge at Hartford in 1952.

Mr. Mahar is a native of Vermont, attended Middlebury College and did graduate work in Meteorology at MIT and later attended Columbia and American Universities.

EDWARD ORMSBY, '40

Edward F. Ormsby, '40, has been promoted to Director of Electronic Data Processing for the International Business Machines Corporation.

Mr. Ormsby joined IBM Corporation in Pittsburgh in November, 1953, and became Applied Science Representative in September, 1954. After attending EAM sales school, the new Electronic Data Processing Director was transferred to Cleveland in April, 1955, where he served as District Sales Representative in the Applied Science Division prior to joining IBM World Trade.

PETER SPATZ, '51

Peter K. Spatz, '51, has been appointed Manager of 700-Series at the Product Development Laboratory, of the International Business Machines Corp. The engineering area which Mr. Spatz now heads encompasses all engineering, development, and design work on IBM's 700-series electronic data processing machines, such as the 704, 705, and 709 computers, among the largest built by the company.

Immediately prior to his advancement, Mr. Spatz had been manager of a machine development organization in the Laboratory's Computer Development area, where he had also been serving as assistant to the area manager.

Mr. Spatz joined IBM in 1951 as a technical engineer, and was promoted to associate engineer early in 1954. Later that year he was advanced to project engineer, and in 1956 was elevated to development eng- [Continued on page 28]

JOHN BARMBY, '44

John G. Barmby, '44, recently received his Doctorate of Philosophy in Public Administration from American University in Washington, D. C. He was one of five to be elected to the honor society for superior achievement in scholarship. Mr. Barmby received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Middlebury College, a Bachelor of Science degree from MIT and his Master of Arts degree from George Washington University. He is now a licensed engineer employed by the Navy Department in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Barmby make their home in Fairfax, Virginia.

DOROTHEA HIGGINS, '30

A recognized authority in her field, Miss Dorothea Higgins, '30, of Buffalo, N. Y., was instrumental in the success of the Job Opportunities Forum for Mature Women, conducted recently by Amherst Adult School, in Snyder, N. Y. Miss Higgins is Personnel Director for Wm. Hengerer Company of Buffalo.

As a member of the Advisory Committee, Miss Higgins worked in a consultant capacity with the school, which relied on her wide experience in personnel, as a guide in setting up the program which featured speakers and a panel discussion.

Retailing was one of the "shortage fields" discussed at the Forum, and it was largely thru Miss Higgins' efforts that the Forum had particular appeal to women interested in this type of career. Wm. Hengerer Co., was one of the Forum sponsors, and also maintained an interview station where job candidates were interviewed. [Continued on page 28]

CALVIN AFFLECK, '31

J. Calvin Affleck, '31, has been appointed Advertising Manager of Keasbey & Mattison Co., Ambler, Pa. This company is one of the country's leading manufacturers of asbestos, asphalt and magnesia products.

Mr. Affleck has held several Alumni posts. Included are: National President of Alumni Association, 1953; Area Chairman of the New Jersey Alumni Fund Raising Committee; President of New York and New Jersey Alumni Association, 1950 to 1953; Technical Advisor, Alumni Fund; and Member of Alumni Council.

Mr. Affleck was formerly national advertising and sales promotion manager of the Television Receiver division of the Allen B. DuMont [Continued on page 28]

GEORGE DEMING, '36

George H. Deming, '36, has been appointed Director of the Continuing National Conference on Metropolitan Problems with offices at 22 West Fifty-Fifth Street, New York City. The Conference, initiated at a meeting early in 1956 at Michigan State University, is designed to serve as a cooperating agency for groups and organizations with the Metropolitan Problems of New York City.

Mr. Deming formerly was on the staff of Major General John S. Bragdon, special assistant to President Eisenhower on public works planning. He has served on the President's Council of Economic Advisers and with the American Municipal Association.

ROBERT JACKSON, '50

Robert C. Jackson, '50, has been promoted to Associate Engineer in the Computer Planning Dept., of the Product Development Laboratory, of the International Business Machines Corp., where he has been engaged in planning evaluation activity. He joined IBM in 1952 as a test engineer assigned to the Poughkeepsie Product Testing Laboratory. Mr. Jackson received his B.A. degree in Mathematics from Middlebury College in 1950.

ELSIE SCOTT, '22

Miss Elsie S. Scott, '22, has been granted the Elizabeth Thompson award for outstanding teaching in science and mathematics in a secondary school. Miss Scott is a member of the faculty of the Northfield School for Girls, East Northfield, Mass.

The award, which included a diploma and $100.00 in cash, were presented to Miss Scott by Dr. John H. Van Vleck, Harvard Dean of Engineering and Applied Physics, at a meeting in Boston of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences which was founded in 1780 by John Adams, in Cambridge, Mass.

Miss Scott was a Teaching Fellow at Middlebury during the academic year of 1922–1923. She was head of the Mathematics Department in the Seymour (Conn.) High School for two years. Since 1925 Miss Scott has been at the Northfield School where she has been teaching Mathematics, Physics, General Science and Chemistry. She is a member of the New England Association of Chemistry Teachers and has a record of perfect attendance at eighteen summer conferences of this association.

MERRITT GARLAND, '41

Dr. Merritt F. Garland, Jr., '41, has successfully completed the requirements of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology for certification as a qualified specialist.

The board is set up with the primary aim of standardizing qualifications for specialists in obstetrics and gynecology, and certification of those who satisfy requirements with regard to specialized training and successful completion of examinations.

Dr. Garland graduated and received his M.D. degree from Tufts College School of Medicine in 1946 after receiving his B.A. degree from Middlebury in 1941.

After serving two years in the Army Medical Corps, he received specialized training in obstetrics and gynecology at the Santa Clara County Hospital, San Jose, Calif., and at the Mary Fletcher Hospital in Burlington, Vt.

He opened his office for the private practice of obstetrics and gynecology in Greenfield, Mass., in September 1953. He is a member of the active staff of both the Farren Memorial and Franklin County Public Hospitals, a member of the New England Obstetrical and Gynecological Society and a Fellow of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

BARTLEY NOURSE, '48

Bartley B. Nourse, '48, has been appointed Scout Executive of the Fellsland Council of Boy Scouts of America at Winchester, Mass. He has eight years experience in Scouting.

He is married to the former Helen Clark, '48. They have two sons, aged 6 and 3.

RICHARD TREAT, '41

Richard L. Treat, '41, formerly with the Boston Post and the Boston Herald-Traveler, has been named Advertising Director of the three Gannett Portland, Me., newspapers.

A naval aviation veteran of World War II, Mr. Treat was at one time local Advertising Manager of the Post, later on the advertising staff of the Herald-Traveler. His experience in the Boston newspaper field covers 15 years as salesman and department head.

He will have direct charge of display, national and classified advertising for the Press Herald, Evening Express and Sunday Telegram. Mr. Treat and his wife and two sons have moved from Hingham, Mass., to Portland.

SAM DAVIS, '21

Sam P. Davis, '21, Manager of the New York Lincoln Agency of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Co., is at present receiving the congratulations of his many friends on the fine results achieved during the past year, which won for his agency the Directors' Cup Award of the company for outstanding sales and service. The agency reported in excess of $500,000 in paid premiums, which is the largest paid premium figure ever attained by a Phoenix Mutual agency in a single year, and registered a 120% gain over 1955.

Mr. Davis started the New York Lincoln Agency at 60 East 42nd Street from scratch in 1932. During the entire period since then his agency has consistently ranked among Phoenix Mutual leaders. Indicative of his outstanding success as a Manager is the fact that he has won the Directors' Cup a total of four times and has twice been runner-up. This cedures. One was to begin with the abstract, a discussion and definition of the purposes of education in general, these principles then to be applied to the details of the curriculum. The other was to commence with particular problems and from consideration and solution of these evolve a general policy. There seemed to be advantages to both of these approaches. Some of the Committee favored the former, the deductive, others the latter, the inductive. We began by trying both.

A sub-committee composed of Professors Cook and Cubeta was asked to prepare a statement of the general aims and objectives of our Middlebury education. Working from a statement drawn up a few years earlier by this same Committee they presented a provisional definition of purpose that the Committee adopted as a guide for its thinking. This read in part:

A liberal arts education in a democratic society is based upon the concept of the dignity and worth of every individual as a human personality. The ends of such an education and the means employed should in all instances be governed by this concept. Students should be provided with a comprehensive knowledge of our cultural heritage, an awareness of the relation of their special fields to this heritage, an understanding of the physical world in which we live, and an ability to think critically in order to form independent judgments. The capacities and powers of these students in rational thinking, curiosity, imagination, and sensitiveness should be directed toward social responsibility and leadership and also toward a love of learning for its own sake.

At the same time, the most natural place to start an inquiry into the curriculum itself seemed to be the courses and requirements of the freshman year. Thus a sub-committee composed of Professors Munford, Cubeta, Klein, Reynolds, and Wissler began a consideration, in particular, of the required Contemporary Civilization course.

It soon became apparent to most of the Committee that helpful as general principles are we would proceed more effectively from the concrete to the abstract rather than vice-versa. Hence we have continued our consideration of individual problems. First of all, this has meant an extended examination of the freshman year, the aims and purposes of the required courses of C.C. and English and also the objectives of the total program presented to the freshman at the beginning of his college course. It is our general intention to move on from this area into the problems of the upper undergraduate years and thus complete our survey of the curriculum. Meanwhile we have also considered the effectiveness of the Group A,B,C requirements and have worked on two matters referred to us by the Administration Committee, the accumulation of excess "D" credits and the programs of our pre-professional plans.

Out of our lengthy discussions of these particular problems has developed, I believe, in the minds of the Committee members a much more definite awareness of the objectives of our liberal arts education than we had had previously as individual faculty members. We are essentially a conservative faculty and the Committee has not evolved anything strikingly different in the way of purposes or philosophy. But we have become more definitely conscious and appreciative of two fundamental aims of liberal education: breadth and depth of knowledge. We believe a student should have as much of both as can be fitted into his four years and is within his natural aptitudes [Continued on page 28]

with our FACULTY

EDITOR'S NOTE: Professor John G. Bowker, Dean of the Faculty, is on sabbatical leave. This Faculty Page is written by Professor Donald H. Ballou, Chairman of the College's Educational Policy Committee.

WHAT is Educational Policy at Middlebury? Basically "Educational Policy" in a college is the sum total of the offerings of the curriculum together with all the rules and regulations that direct and hedge a student in his selection of courses and the environment in which these courses are presented. In this sense educational policy is made every time a department changes the requirements for its major, the faculty approves of adding or discontinuing a particular course, or the administration secures an additional instructor so that smaller sections may be possible within a certain department. Thus the departments, the faculty as a whole and its various committees, the administration and the trustees all have important roles in shaping the educational policy of a college.

But we are concerned here more specifically with a report on what Middlebury's Educational Policy Committee has been doing these last two years. This Committee was first instituted as a separate standing committee of the faculty shortly after Dr. Stratton became president. Then two years ago, in a move to make the functioning of the faculty more democratic, Dr. Stratton provided that this Committee should be elected. Accordingly, in the fall of 1955 elections were held and ten faculty members chosen for the Committee. They were chosen as individuals and not as representatives of particular segments of the faculty but, as a whole, included good representation of the four divisions. Professors Cook, Cubeta, and Munford were from the Humanities Division, Professor Guarnaccia from the Foreign Language Division, Professors Klein, Reynolds, and Valentine from the Social Science Division, and Professors Ballou, Hitchcock, and Wissler from the Natural Science Division. This current year Professors Andrews, Moyer, and George Wilson, from the Humanities, Natural Science, and Social Science Divisions, respectively, have replaced Professors Klein and Valentine, who are no longer with the College, and Professors Cook and Cubeta, who have been on leave. The Committee has also been reduced to nine, three to be elected annually for terms of three years.

At its first meeting President Stratton charged the new Committee with an over-all review and examination of the Middlebury curriculum. Were we, and the faculty, satisfied with what Middlebury was offering and doing educationally? Were the present courses serving the objectives of the College or could others be introduced or designed that would do this better? Were our freshman, language, and Group requirements fulfilling their function properly and adequately? What about our major requirements, honors programs, general examinations? In other words, were we and the faculty satisfied with our present "Educational Policy" or were there changes that would strengthen the curriculum and further our liberal arts objectives?

This was an assignment of real magnitude. Where should the Committee begin and how should it go about its work? It was immediately apparent that this was not something to be disposed of summarily in a few meetings. Even meeting every week, as it was at once decided to do, such an overall examination would take several years at least, for as faculty members we all had full-time teaching loads and important as was this assignment our teaching was still our primary responsibility.

The first few meetings of the Committee were devoted to a general discussion of how this problem could be attacked. We learned that a number of other institutions had recently made such self-examinations. Several with the help of grants from the Ford Foundation had sent out detailed questionnaires and had published their results and conclusions in extensive reports. Interesting, however, as the statistics might be, the labor of preparing, distributing, and tabulating lengthy questionnaires seemed more than a Committee such as ours could undertake, and the inconclusiveness of the results obtained from those we had seen made us question their worth. After all, we were a small faculty who knew each other well; in our division and faculty meetings we heard our colleagues explain what they were doing in their courses, and in advising our students we were constantly scanning the offerings of the college as a whole. And so it was decided to gather information from students, faculty, or the Registrar's office as it was needed rather than to seek it wholesale.

There still appeared to be two alternative pro-pieces to fit into the picture. This led us to observe closely and learn that not only could we break apart atoms but we could build them up by shooting as projectiles, smaller atomic nuclei, at larger nuclei and have the projectiles stick and thus make a new more massive atom.

With this achievement we felt, and rightly so, that we were learning something about how our atoms of elements had been created in the first place.

Out of the study of all phases of this work, with the accompanying theoretical developments, we ultimately saw the possibility of changing matter or mass into energy by two basically different processes. Theory had early indicated that matter or mass and energy as they are defined in physics should be interchangeable, these following two processes which were indicated as being possible are today called "Fission" and "Fusion." In reality fission means the falling apart or exploding of an atom into smaller pieces or atoms with an accompanying tremendous release of energy. Fusion means the assembling of smaller atoms to make larger atoms with an equally tremendous release of energy. This is really a very interesting situation, to realize that both processes are possible with some of the natural elements which exist on this earth.

In both these processes, which have been developed as rapidly as possible, we find that many of the by-product-atoms are radioactive and give off radiations similar to those emitted from the naturally radioactive elements. These new products we say are artificially radioactive.

Very early in this development scientists discovered and have used the fact, that these radiations are helpful and destructive in many ways. One much used procedure has been to use radiation to combat undesirable growths in human beings such as cancer. These radiations are able to kill the undesirable growth if localized. They also kill other forms of life when they are applied with sufficient intensity.

Here now we see the atom and its influence invading the life sciences. With the present desire to use the processes of fusion and fission to produce new sources of energy for man, we find to date there will always be some radioactive by-products; these send off radiation which can be harmful to life. The feared effects are bone cancer, leukemia and genetic effects.

Scientists are using these radiations in all kinds of tests, and are finding uses for them in many fields; but that is a topic I can not treat tonight. However, I am desirous of pointing out to you how our developments of these processes may become hazardous to every one of us.

Experiments to date show several definite effects —cancer of skin and bones in particular can be caused by radiation; incidences of leukemia are definitely able to be shown to be related to radiation. Genetic effects, undesirable mutations, etc., are feared in man and are definitely known to be produced in mice and fruit flies. A great deal more definite information needs to be gathered before we are sure of the effects of steady background ionizing radiation on man. We know some of the effects of high doses over short periods of time. We have some data from medical uses of radiation; but to predict beyond the realms of the "Best Guess" and the "Calculated Risk" requires much more experimentation and research than has been done up to the present time. Today, particularly in the past few months, we are witnessing many kinds of reactions of mankind to the knowledge of effects of the atom when it is radioactive. Nations call for the discontinuance of "Atomic Tests." Individuals such as Albert Schweitzer call for the same thing. Every newspaper seems to have an article on the great question of the radiation danger to mankind. Scientists are in disagreement; but men as renowned as Linus Pauling, a Nobel Prize winner in chemistry, are calling for a cessation of all such tests to say nothing of the possibilities of an atomic war. Some nations—maybe all nations are really asking for some concrete steps towards disarmament, at least in the "Atomic sense." It is on this basis that I stated earlier that the subject of "The Atom in the World Today" is really timely.

We are slowly getting some information about radiation effects. Recently one of the first articles giving quantitative data with control checks was published by E. B. Lews, of the Biology Department of the University of California in Science, Vol. 125—p. 955. It gives specific data showing quantitatively just how the induction of leukemia in man is influenced by ionizing radiation.

The study shows that at Hiroshima and Nagasaki the incidence of leukemia in survivors is a direct function of the radiation to which these survivors are estimated to have been exposed. Further data is given on the incidence of leukemia among radiologists. Again a positive result is indicated from the data gathered. The incidence of leukemia is studied for a group of 1400 individuals who were irradiated as infants for an enlarged thymus condition. Again a positive result, showing that ionizing radiation for medical [Continued on page 29]

The Atom in the World Today*

By Dr. Benjamin F. Wissler, Professor of Physics

At this meeting of Alumni, Alumnae and friends at Bread Loaf I feel the topic "The Atom in the World Today" can be considered as very timely.

I feel sure that tracing man's knowledge of the atom for this audience is quite unnecessary. But a few brief references may be in order to let us see that atoms have possibly been basic in man's thinking, and that our use of the atomic concept has led us to the point where we find ourselves today.

Early Greek philosophers, considering the problems of the world about them were led to believe in basic subdivisions of matter. Anaxagoras (500–428 BC) is credited with originating the concept of combinations and separations of "spermata" of matter. This idea of Anaxagoras' influenced Democritus (460–360 BC) who is credited with the origin of the idea of atoms or indivisible units of matter.

Empedecles (484–424 BC) is credited with the origin of the concept that earth, water, air and fire as the basic elements which were understood at that time.

From this early Greek period, which unquestionably strongly influenced the development of our present civilization, and ideas, up to the time of 1800 A.D., relatively few lasting advances in ideas were made.

Dalton and Avogadro, with others, in the early 1800's, on the basis of sound quantitative experimentation, brought forth "the law of definite proportions."

In this period of "The nineteenth century," the subject of heat had become an important one; it was definitely linked to the structure of matter and the period resulted in the establishment of our present molecular and atomic hypotheses. With the concept of elastic spheres for atoms these hypotheses were beautifully developed by what we could call the specific subject of chemistry; I prefer to simply say by the overall study of science. Here we then had atoms of elements and combinations of atoms to form molecules and compounds. This development seemed to be quite satisfactory and sufficiently complete in those days. But in 1870, Crookes, experimenting with electrical discharges in gases, observed "Cathode Rays." These for a time were puzzling and were characterized "A fourth state of matter."

In 1897, J. J. Thomsen identified these cathode rays as electrons, a new particle of matter, not identifiable as a chemical element. This meant that the atom was really not "The indivisible."

From this moment on, roughly since 1900, progress has been extremely rapid. Man has broadened and extended his knowledge about atoms. Of greatest importance is the fact that he has learned about their subdivisions and how they are built. In outline, if we accept the fact that atoms in some way are related to, and responsible for, all observed physical phenomena, the pattern of development of our information about atoms may be approximated as follows:

1898—The electron was identified as a new particle—not fitting into the then known basic elements. It was correctly identified as a part of an atom.

1910—Masses of atoms were first measured by electrical and magnetic means.

1912—Rutherford determined the nature of the structure atom as consisting of a positive nucleus with electrons about it; not an elastic sphere, not a pumpkin atom.

1913—Bohr, developed a picture of a simple atom consistent with other observed phenomena such as atomic spectra, and energy considerations.

With the development of these pictures about the structure of atoms, and with the continued advances in the knowledge of how atoms combine into groups or compounds, scientists then felt we were making real progress—and we were.

We observed the facts that in natural radioactivity, large atoms broke up, and with the techniques we had developed, we could measure the nature and properties of all the pieces. We could also measure the velocities and energies of the ejected particles. These observations soon led to the idea that such high energy particles, as existed in the radiations from naturally radioactive elements, might be used to bombard and possibly "break" or "smash" other atoms serving as targets. This idea led naturally to the development of the accelerating devices which we read a great deal about today. These devices have been supremely successful—we learned how to break apart the atoms we know, strip off the electrons, split the positive nucleus and today we have a real puzzle with approximately 30

Campus Commentator

By Priscilla A. Noble, '57

FOUR YEARS AGO the class of 1957 arrived at Middlebury. Now we leave, and as we go we naturally look back over our stay here with a mind to evaluation. For four years we have spent not a little of our time and energy griping about the College. At the same time I think most of us feel very strongly about Middlebury, as a high-rating liberal arts college.

This is not to say that Middlebury is perfect, or that criticism and censure should cease. There are always improvements which can be made. The point is that gripes are made, in most cases, with the intention of bringing about change for the better. Students criticize because they feel that their college is worth improving.

Sometimes in our haste to find fault, we underemphasize the aspects of Middlebury of which we are proud. In almost every area of college life there are things which we like and which we take for granted, and graduation might be a good time to take stock of them.

There are, for example, many unnoticed phases which enter into the overall picture of Middlebury which graduates take away with them. One pleasing aspect is the setting of the campus. Middlebury is formed partially by the presence of mountains, snow, and the absence of urbanization. A specific pleasure is derived from the consistency of the architecture. A great many colleges are in themselves a short history of American building, but Middlebury in general has avoided that pitfall and the resulting uniformity is refreshing.

The tradition which has built up around various college activities is also enjoyed by students. The women show more evidence of this aspect in such activities as step singing and the cane ceremony, but the men are not entirely left out of this realm. Blue Key, Waubanakee, and freshman orientation are, after all, traditional, as well as intercollegiate and intramural athletic competition, and fraternity participation. The women of the Class of 1957 have expressed their special interest in musical tradition through their recording of the college songs on an LP record.

The basic meaning of college, however, lies in the people. To begin with, Middlebury has a good faculty which is interested in keeping the College high in academic rating. Although we have moaned over hard courses and failing grades, we respect those teachers who made us work hard. Professors at Middlebury, in addition to teaching courses and keeping up to date on their own fields, must work on numerous committees and fulfill other extra-curricular obligations, even chaperoning. It is difficult for undergraduates to evaluate their professors in comparison to those at other schools, but most of us feel that Middlebury's professors compare favorably with those of other colleges of our size.

In general, students are also happy about the Administration. This aspect of the College takes a rather continuous beating from the students, but we realize at the same time that President Stratton, for instance, has done an excellent job in developing the teaching resources and physical facilities of the College. Special laurels from the women to the Dean of Women. "Ma Kelly" absorbs complaints and problems from an enormous number of people and she has won the respect and admiration of both campuses.

Most of all, however, students like the student body. We are glad to be able to identify ourselves with the other people who make up Middlebury's learning group. The student body is the fluctuating part of the College, and it is typified by varying qualities in different college generations, but today's students are Middlebury today. Students from earlier years have graduated to respectable positions in American life and we accept from them the challenge to improve on their record. For right now, however, we like what we have done as students, and admire the accomplishments of our fellows.

Examples of student activities which inspire particular admiration are Carnival, Midd-Time Varieties, The Middlebury Conference, the Religion Conference, Women's Forum, and the productions of Wig & Pen and Players.

Middlebury's Winter Carnival is an appallingly large undertaking, requiring the coordinated efforts of a good percentage of the student body. The Mountain Club, which carried a full schedule of activities the rest of the year as well, has full charge of Carnival and deserves credit for this event which is the largest such weekend in the East, operated solely by students.

Beginning our freshman year, Midd-Time Varieties has put on four full length musical productions at each Junior Weekend. Here again the aid of many individuals was required, and the results have indicated that those working on the shows are capable of professional attainment. Music, lyrics, books, sets, as well as acting and directing are in the hands of members of the Middlebury student body.

The Annual Middlebury Cultural Conference has become an important feature during each undergraduate year. Outstanding speakers, provocative discussions and enthusiastic student participation have made the three day conference a most worthwhile addition to academic life at Middlebury. This past year's conference dealing with The Role of the Intellectual in America was particularly successful.

Similarly, the Middlebury Religion Conference, which first became reality four years ago, has become a traditional part of the College Year. Basic to the existence of the event is the use of the word "Religion" in place of "Religious" in describing it. No one suggests that there is or should be anything holy about the Religion Conference. The purpose of the parley is to discuss an important part of human experience in an intellectual fashion, not to proclaim the goodness or badness of any custom, sect, or faith. Completely student run with the support and guidance of the College Chaplain, Rev. Charles Scott, this activity brings to the campus outstanding men in the field of Religion to discuss with undergraduates issues involving the relationship of man and God.

The Women's Forum is a particularly unique organization. Its record of community service activities and achievements have made it a campus-town liaison group that all Middlebury people can be proud of.

MALABAR II Crosses The Atlantic Ocean— East and West

By Stillman F. Kelley II, '29

With summer 1957 at hand thoughts turn to our 9000 mile voyage aboard the Malabar II, a sturdy 42-foot schooner which took us by sail to Spain and home by the way of Bermuda early last summer. Members of our crew consisted of Exton Guckes, owner of the Malabar II; the writer; Hodding Carter of Greenville, Mississippi; Ed Wallerstein, Richmond, Virginia; and a college student by the name of Peter Blake whose family consented to allow him to leave his studies for the experience. Peter brought much needed youth to the crew as the balance of its members averaged 52 years in age.

Sails were set and we departed from the Corinthian Yacht Club at Essington on the Delaware River on April first with enough supplies on board to allow us forty-five days without skimping. The run down the river was slow and uneventful and it was 1315 of the following day before we took our departure at the Cape May jetty and headed out to sea toward Spain.

As the Malabar II was docking at the Real Club Nautico de La Caruna, La Caruna, Spain, this picture was taken by a Spanish photographer who happened to be taking pictures near the dock at the time.

For several days we had mixed and variable winds, some calms, and an overall sloppy condition that looked ominous. On the morning of the seventh day it began to blow gale force and we knew we were in for trouble. On any provocation we always secured the mainsail, as under such a rig, of jib and foresail Malabar would handle far more easily and lose very little speed. By daybreak it was blowing so hard that we had taken in the jib and proceeded under foresail alone. It calmed down toward nightfall but this proved to be the veritable "calm before the storm" which broke forth in all its fury the next morning. By this time we were running under bare poles and it was a revelation to see how well the boat handled in this condition, and what fine speed we were able to make. At times we were logging seven knots under bare poles which is really a feat when one realizes that the hull speed of the Malabar is a little under eight knots. The seas were mountainous, at least fifty to sixty feet high, and were continually breaking over our quarter, flooding the cockpit and taking advantage of the smallest crack to enter the cabin and salt it down which made living conditions below most miserable.

By evening of the eleventh day at sea the winds started to ease and we were able to bend on the foresail. All hands fully realized that they had been through a most trying experience and one, all of us hoped not to duplicate. A general survey of damage acquired showed nothing of a serious nature. Some mast hoops on the main and fore had broken, the small fisherman had been washed overboard from under the dinghy, the tail of the mainsail even though in stops had been blown out, and the foreward hatch [Continued on page 29]

Northern New Jersey Club: President: Dorothea Mathison Scott '37; Vice-President: Katharine Allen Leslie '38; Secretary-Treasurer: Eleanor Layton Miesse '19; Corresponding Secretary: Carolyn Carlton Hentz '52; Membership Chairman: Dorothy Schroeder Sterling '44; Representative to Nominating Committee: Lillian Ranquist Emory '25; Alumnae Council Representative: Dorothea Mathison Scott '37.

Alumnae Association of New Jersey: (Completing two-year term)—President: Mildred Becker Bennett '41; Vice-President: Virginia Phillips Whitney '36; Secretary-Treasurer: Elizabeth Gates Tuttle '38; Publicity Chairman: Doris Collins Wedemann '29; Nominating Committee: Ruby Reeve Magnuson '37; Margaret Ferry Morris '43; Lillian Ranquist Emory '25.

The Morris and Essex Club and the Dean Ross Chapter held three meetings each, the first one jointly. The Northern New Jersey Club held four meetings; at the first one an invitation was extended to all alumni living in the area. Each club held a scotch auction and the Northern New Jersey Club also sponsored a theatre party. Proceeds were sent to the Eleanor S. Ross Scholarship Fund and to the Alumni Fund.

Paid memberships numbered 25 in the Morris and Essex Club, 18 in the Dean Ross Chapter, and 21 in the Northern New Jersey Club.

The Association sponsored a freshman tea on September 7, 1956 at the Methodist Church Fellowship Hall in Chatham, with Dorothea Mathison Scott '37 serving as chairman and Ann Clark Rodda '42 as hostess. In October Water E. Brooker addressed the three groups in two meetings on "Can A Small Liberal Arts College Survive?" In March Professor Rose Martin spoke to the three clubs on three consecutive evenings on "To Spain with a Purpose."

Plans for the coming year include a freshman tea in September and a visit from Professor Waldo Heinrichs in November. Mary Belcher Dello-Russo, '47, is serving as chairman of the tea to be held on Saturday, September 7 at the home of Dorothea Mathison Scott '37, Old Woods Road, Saddle River. A cordial invitation is extended to all Alumnae.

A new Alumnae Club which is being formed in the Southern Connecticut Area. On May 24th, a warm-up meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Daivd M. Smith (Catherine Van Aken, '47) in Hamden. There were fifteen present, and classes represented ranged from 1923 to somewhere in the 1950's. It was decided to hold the first "official" meeting in October. At this meeting, a name will be decided on and officers elected. A treasury will be started, and dues collected. This group contemplates having a picnic in September for incoming freshmen.

The Minneapolis Area: On May first six Middlebury women attended a "brunch" at the home of Mrs. James G. Shuttleworth. The visit was both pleasant and productive. Plans were begun for a Middlebury picnic to be held in this vicinity in September. The subject of organizing as a club was discussed, but as the group is small as well as transient, decision was made to postpone an attempt until a more solid source of personnel reside in the Twin-Cities.

The Texas Club held its annual dinner in Austin at the Driskill Hotel on March 9th. With some loyal supporters travelling 200 miles from Dallas, the gathering numbered 14, with representation from various classes from 1902 through 1952.

As an outstanding and loyal alumnus Mr. Law has been Class Fund Chairman, Secretary-Treasurer and President of the Middlebury Alumni Association of Western New York, President of the Buffalo District Associated Alumni, member of the Alumni Council, National President of the Alumni Association, and Alumni Trustee. In all these positions he has contributed a great deal to Middlebury. In appreciation for your many years of loyal and meritorious service we honor you with this plaque."

Pruda Harwood Wiley, '12—"an outstanding member of an outstanding class. For four years at College, you maintained a Phi Beta Kappa average, gave generously of your time and talents to many extra-curricular activities on the hill and on Sundays played the Methodist Church organ in town.

"For more than forty years, as a member of that incomparable team of Cap and Pruda, you have enriched the life of the community in which the two of you have lived and have given of yourselves to Middlebury College far beyond the call of duty. You have both greatly added to the pleasure of a countless number of Alumni returning for Commencement, Homecoming, or attending Middlebury reunions in other places.

"The words for that time honored song, Gamaliel Painter's Cane were written by Professor Charles Baker Wright, but he always insisted that it was your music which put the song across. The words to the Panther Song are yours and both the words and music for The Old Midd Spirit are among your lasting gifts to the College.

"It is our sincere hope that you may both be present at every Commencement for many years to come and that in your Arizona home this plaque may join the one awarded Cap and that the two of them may serve as a constant reminder of the place the WILEYS hold in the hearts of Middlebury Alumni."

Hazel McLeod Wills, '09—"a member of Phi Beta Kappa, she received an honorary masters degree in 1942 from Middlebury. Mrs. Wills is one of the most active people in the State of Vermont in educational interests. She was wife of Governor William H. Wills and has always been a popular speaker to college groups. In 1949 she became the first woman Trustee of University of Vermont which showed how highly thought of she was among the educators and government officials in Vermont.

"It was as a member of the Advisory Board of Middlebury College and as its chairman, in 1947, that we all were able to share the good wisdom and gracious manner of Mrs. Wills. She has always been faithful in all Middlebury activities and has honored her Alma Mater by being one of its Alumnae. She has been so modest about all her services to Middlebury, that we want to take this opportunity to show our appreciation to her for her loyalty. We therefore, honor her with this plaque with thanks for her meritorious service to her college."

have to do with all this? It performed a basic function. It stimulated mass demand. Reflecting America, the motion picture from the very beginning suggested and displayed new styles, new devices, new ways of living. It created demands for sewing machines, refrigerators, rumble seats, the pop-up toaster—the list is endless.

Books to Read

Hammock Reading

Edited by Margaret L. Fayer, Librarian

Light and frothy for warm vacation days this list, compiled from among recent publications, is intended as a guide to leisurely entertaining reading for the summer.

▶ Bissell, Richard. Say, Darling. Little.

By the author of the Broadway hit musical, Pajama Game, this book tells the story of Jack Jordan who wrote a novel which became a book club selection and is now in the process of being made into a musical. Mr. Bissell's own experiences in the theater lend authenticity to this acidly satiric novel of life behind the footlights, and the reader goes through the ups and downs of getting the show on the road with almost the same emotions as its author.

▶ Guareschi, Giovanni. Don Camillo Takes The Devil By The Tail. Farrar.

Don Camillo has won a host of followers in the course of his first three books, and the fourth will undoubtedly swell their number. In my opinion, it is the best since The Little World of Don Camillo, first of the series, and in many ways very similar to it. Don Camillo, village priest, and Peppone, pro-Communist mayor, are still battling it out, aided respectively by the Lord and the Devil. The humor, whimsy, and almost childlike simplicity seem not to be diluted by being drawn out through four volumes, nor destroyed in translation.

▶ Head, Ann. Fair With Rain. McGraw.

Told by the understanding wife and mother, this is a delightful account of the life of the Blair family of South Carolina. Father is a gentleman-farmer, David is a student at Princeton, the teenage Amanda is a typical adolescent, and the young twins make the family complete. David's socialite fiancee adds zest and excitement to the story and a plot on which to build. But its real appeal lies in its wealth of descriptive detail and its very human characters.

▶ Henry, Vera. A Lucky Number. Lippincott.

You can gather the whole family around you and read aloud together this novel of Canadian family life during the early years of the present century, for they will all enjoy the loosely strung episodes which go to make it up. Described as a "Canadian Life With Mother," this series of vignettes has charm and lively humor reminiscent of Clarence Day.

▶ Kent, Louise Andrews. The Summer Kitchen. Houghton.

All former Middlebury women should get a twinge of nostalgia from this unusual cookbook which combines delicious recipes with a delightful account of life in Vermont in summer. The author has written a number of novels with the Green Mountain State as their locale, and her fondness for the State and its people are evident in all of them. Do you know how to prepare that succulent delicacy, Cornish hen? A mouth-watering recipe is included.

▶ Marquand, John P. Life At Happy Knoll. Little.

A collection of entertaining stories about a country club and its varied problems. Though not of the caliber of some of the author's early novels, these tales are entertaining, easy to read, and reveal flashes of the Marquand wit and penetration.

▶ Nabokov, Vladimir. Pnin. Doubleday.

Pnin is a thoroughly lovable Russian scholar now living and teaching in America, whom you may have already met in the several sketches which appeared in the New Yorker. Humor and pathos are skillfully blended in this depiction of the life of the emigré, not yet rooted in his new country, though entirely cut off from his native one. Even a casual knowledge of campus life will suffice to appreciate the author's artful satire of it.

▶ Nichols, Beverly. Sunlight On The Laun. Dutton.

In the tradition of his earlier works, Mr. Nichols recounts the pleasures and problems connected with his country house and garden, and describes the life of the English community in which he lives. In 1952, with the publication of Merry Hall, the author began this trilogy, which was continued in Laughter on the Stairs (1954). All are readable, charming, and sure to appeal to anyone who enjoys a garden and leisurely living.

▶ Porter, Graham. Small Wonder. Macmillan.

A first novel with no serious literary pretensions, this light comedy is just lots of fun. Always amusing, sometimes hilarious, often cleverly satiric, it tells the familiar story of young love, marriage, and parenthood. Though not destined to be long remembered, it offers a few hours of real delight in its chronicle of twelve crucial months in the life of a typical young American family.

▶ Saroyan, William. Papa You're Crazy. Little.

The life of a 10-year-old boy and his father on the beach at Malibu, California, told by the boy. It has the freshness of a boy's outlook as it describes the everyday life of father and son as they race along the beach, drive up the coast, talk about this and that, try their hands at cooking (on which father is writing a book), etc. Thoroughly enjoyable from start to finish, it is one of the most typically Saroyan of the author's works, if one of the less meaty.

▶ Steinbeck, John. The Short Reign of Pippin IV; a fabrication. Viking.

An extravaganza about French politics and what happens to it when a middle-aged amateur astronomer is catapulted to kingship. This short parody on history, set in the very near future, is satire at its best—a clever blending of the comic and the serious that leaves the reader with something to think about. Devotees of Steinbeck's more substantial novels are warned that this is no Grapes of Wrath—note the subtitle and read accordingly.

▶ Way, R. P. Antique Dealer. Macmillan.

Not a novel, but a true account of the author's life as a dealer in antiques, written with the art of the novelist. As a young boy, R. P. Way worked in his father's antique [Continued on page 30] thing to have foresight, to use life insurance, accident insurance, property insurance, old age insurance, to cut down the risk of accident. We do well to guard against sudden injury to our health through medical and hospital insurance. But what if we become obsessed with the idea of playing it safe? I see an insidious weakness, a soft and slack view of life, in the advertisements showing a middle-aged couple reclining on the beach in front of their Florida home, bearing the caption: 'You, too, can retire at 50 on $400 a month.' There is far too much of the opinion among college students that the guarantee of a bright financial future is the best result of your college education.

"Not that man's struggle for security is unimportant. His first task has always been to domesticate himself on this wild and hostile planet. The disease in seeking it becomes apparent when men will no longer take risks or endure privation in the standards of living they adopt, in the professions they choose.

"Here is the crying need for a totally new dimension of self-reliance. If a man could but stir our youth to constancy of purpose! If one could infuse iron into your natures! If one could breathe into you a new stoicism! Let your non-conformity be something better than a devil-may-care embarkation on Richard Halliburton escapades, or a bohemian pursuit of culture. Let your non-conformity be a refusal to be stampeded into adoption of the mediocrities of an American way of life that begins and ends with a love of our civilization of gadgets and the decision to live for its soft pleasures and easy comforts. Let your non-conformity be a stern resistance to these almost irresistible temptations. Guard well the purity of your motive—to keep alive in your minds a devotion to a better set of values. Then let your daring and originality be in your service of the community of the future in new and unprecedented ways.

"Emerging are countless opportunities for a service of the social ideal in ways never before possible. Whole new occupations are opening up, and far more hopeful ways of achieving the age-old goals of justice and love in existing ones. Your choice of your vocation will largely determine how full and rich your life will be; but consider well that this choice will be determined by your courage, that is, by what you are willing to let go. The basic resource is still the vision and the initiative in your character.

"I hope that many of you will choose politics as the field of your adventure with its enormous influence over the public mind. I hope that many of you will go into foreign service with its opportunities to reduce the frictions between nations, to bring the benefits of science and technology to hungry, ill-housed and desperate masses. I hope that very many of you will find the UN scope for your will to see a warless world based upon intelligent population control, food for all men, and the great concepts of understanding, equality, and selfless service. I know that many of you will enter business, but may it be with the realization of totally new opportunities here to humanize the financial structure, trade, and industry through the employment of a better psychological knowledge and a better art of human relations where once there was only competition and virtual war.

"Above all, that many will choose teaching and the church, where your influence will be greatest to make these views prevail; for we are looking toward the penetration of our social fabric with the spirit of enlightened religion. Through such choices, you will find for yourselves the meaning of an abundant life. But the discovery of it for yourselves waits upon one condition: Have you what it takes? The land is out there waiting for you if only you can say to yourself: 'I will go up and occupy the land, for I am well able to take it.'"

anyone in the business."

Arthur Hull Hayes, now president of the CBS Radio Network, was then manager of KCBS, San Francisco. Dick came here in June, 1954, and Hayes put him in what was kiddingly known as the "Hayes Boot Camp" as an "apprentice," a fancy radio name for office boy.

Worked as Usher

For seven months Dick ushered at Bill Weaver's variety shows, ran mimeograph machines, delivered messages around town, brought coffee to engineers and thoroughly observed operations upside down and inside out from the ground up.

"It was not very enjoyable, I'll tell you that, but good experience," he recalled at lunch the other day.

He wanted to get in the sales department and still thinks he'd like to be a salesman.

"I figure you can't make a decent living yourself until you first make it for someone else," he said. "As a salesman you're bringing money in. You have an advantage. And that leads to administration work."

But there were no sales openings and in the "Hayes Boot Camp" there was no such thing as influence even if your old man happened to be the greatest radio-TV salesman who ever lived. Previous graduates had succeeded on their own merits, becoming announcers, writers, producers, performers, promotion men, salesmen or whatever.

Wrote Sample Scripts

Since the sales door was blocked, Dick tackled Carroll Hansen, the station's news and sports director. He hounded him day and night, he left sample scripts on his desk.

"It was banging him on the head, I drove him crazy, but he was a nice guy, he listened to me," said Dick. "In January, 1955, he let me try out as a newswriter. It was a menial salary but it gave me a lift."

Dick clicked on the typewriter until July of that year when there was an opening on the announcing staff. It paid twice as much. Dick asked Hansen if he should try for it. Hansen replied:

"Anytime you can double your salary do it. No matter what the job is."

Dick auditioned and won. He became an announcer assigned to the newsroom. He worked election returns, did staff duty, voiced remotes and documentaries and developed an exceptional talent for sports casting.

The following summer when Hansen was promoted to CBS headquarters in New York, Dick was high logical successor on the nightly "Looking 'Em Over" sports show, and as sports director.

Resembles Father

Red headed like his father, Dick stands 5 feet 8, weighs 160 pounds, resembles his father in looks, complexion, mannerisms and voice.

On the subject of Godfrey senior, Dick says; "He's a

The films of Hollywood—and today the films of all nations—are vital communicators and stimulators in the world market place—for invention, production and trade. They are the world's bright show windows for the world's crafts and products.

Sometimes, it is true, our films are accused of stirring too many demands in too many places, of fostering, if not inventing, materialism. To my mind, there is nothing wrong with stirring up demands in the world—and showing that productivity can meet them. And if Hollywood has done that, aren't we still on the side of the angels?

I think so and so does that salty, articulate angel from Britain, Professor Dennis Brogan of Cambridge. To his own countrymen, he said:

"If the movies make the British housewife demand revolutionary changes in kitchen and house-planning, I'm all for it. The American film shows a society full of energy, faith, industry and hope.

"Well," the professor demanded, "what's wrong with that?"

Wrong with it? Surely it is a prodigious accomplishment of the Hollywood film that it has contributed to such a very large degree in these fifty years to the momentum and speed of American mass production . . . the American assembly line.

Now, as my second point, I'd like to mention Hollywood's even greater role . . . its intangible role . . . as an agent for democracy, for the worth and dignity of man throughout the world. Why has Hollywood succeeded in this role? What, in fact, are the concepts Hollywood has conveyed to the world through its motion pictures by reflecting—sometimes dimly but far more often magnificently—the life and the living in our country? I think they are these three:

Hollywood reflects the concept that man is an individual, not a mass.

Hollywood reflects the concept that man can be and is meant to be free.

Hollywood reflects the concept that man can remake his society as he wishes it to be.

To many of us, these concepts may seem old and dated. They have been part of our national fabric for almost two centuries, so long that we scarcely notice them any more. But elsewhere in the world, they are neither dated nor commonplace. In Africa, in Asia, in many parts of the globe, they are as fresh and exciting and challenging as they were to our forefathers back in the 18th century.

During the past dozen years, I've been a privileged eyewitness to Hollywood's ability to reflect America. I've seen our movies in Damascus and Hongkong and Bombay. I've watched them with tribesmen in the Belgian Congo who'd never seen a movie before. I've seen them with Bushmen sitting cross-legged on the floor in a thatched hut in Australia. I've seen them in Japan, in the Philippines and in Soviet Russia and the Satellites. From these experiences I'd like to recall two incidents.

A few months ago I had breakfast in Manila with President Magsaysay, the late great leader of the Philippines. We'd been having difficulty negotiating currency exchanges with his government and I observed that we might have to withdraw our films. "Oh, no!" the President told me. "We'd have a revolution here if you stopped your films. And besides, my wife would never stand for it!"

I remember another evening on a mountain top near Djakarta, Indonesia, where our motion picture representative lives. Each Saturday night he puts up a bedsheet on his front lawn as a movie screen and invites the whole countryside to attend an American film.

I watched the audience arrive at sundown, the women walking up the mountain with their babies on their shoulders, the workers from the nearby tea estates, the soldiers from the local garrison. The movie that night was a rather antique Western without subtitles and I doubted that the audience could make head or tail of it. But they cheered and responded in the right places and, afterward, a local priest came up to me.

"Americans believe as we do," he told me through an interpreter. "How do you mean?" I asked him. "Well," he said, "our religion tells us that good men prosper and evil men don't. From your fine movie, we see that you Americans believe this too!"

Our motion pictures are one means by which America today reflects—and communicates—our hopes and our beliefs to the world. Our films have shown that man can telescope his traditional slow growth from feudalism to free society. They have shown the new nations of the world, now engaged in a titanic struggle for economic freedom, that there is a basis for hope—a basis for energy, industry and faith. Surely this is another prodigious accomplishment.

I have spoken of the motion picture to illustrate the role of people-to-people communication in today's world. But this is not a role to be left to any one agency, to any one group. This is a job for all Americans. It is especially the job for the graduates this June of all our schools and colleges and universities. It is the job for young, fresh, bold, audacious minds.

For many of you, this afternoon will mark the end of your formal education. But it should not mark the end of your education.

It is up to you. It will be the end of your education if you develop contempt for ideas and for ideals. Then you will stagnate. But if the Middlebury Doctrine remains with you—the concept that education is the way to living and knowledge—this day will truly be your commencement . . . a new beginning to your growth and development. If you remain hospitable to ideas and to ideals, your education itself will never end.

I have no doubt of your choice. As graduates of Middlebury College, you will, I am sure, meet this changing world with free and open and exploring minds. And as you do so, our country and our age will be known not for the battles we have fought, but for the achievements that have emerged from the classroom and the lecture hall. Then will our civilization come to its finest flower.

we are talking about the courage that keeps us pegging away at the job of the good society long after our patience has been exhausted, that keeps us believing and hopeful when we think we no longer have any grounds for hope. . . .

"In a word, the courage for these days is a willingness to adventure, in the risks that you will take, in the pioneering that you will do. The full thrill and dimension of living will not be ours until we face our time with daring and originality.

"Our age has come to rate its security high. Let us realize that we may rate it too high. The obvious advantages of the 'welfare state' have already infected us with a sickness. We are in danger of becoming a nation of leaners. It is one underly it. "Educational Policy" is both general and specific. But only as particular situations illustrate abstract principles do these principles lose their generality and become effective. Middlebury, through its administration, faculty, and Educational Policy Committee, is continually striving to implement its objectives more effectively. The Alumni, as former students, have been exposed to our strengths and weaknesses in the past. If out of this experience you have ideas that might be of help to us in our continuing self-examination, won't you let us know? As graduates of Middlebury you are the final judges as to whether our program and offerings provide that challenge and contribute to that intellectual maturity that we believe are the foundation and strength of a liberal education.

treatment does influence the incidence of leukemia.

A control study was also carried out for the white population of the borough of Brooklyn. On the basis of the entire study, the conclusion was shown that from 10–20% of the leukemia incident in the Brooklyn population may be due to normally present background radiation.

This is the first such published attempt that provides positive information for a small portion of effects of ionizing radiation on man—namely the incidence of leukemia. A great deal more such information is needed to conduct the present discussion intelligently. It will come but to date all indications show that precautions are in order. The effects are real—international consideration of the problem is a must.

Now a word of caution, military "weapons tests" are not the only sources of ionizing radiation. The hazards from nuclear power-producing reactions are just as real. The disposition of the "wastes" from these proposed peacetime uses poses a very real problem. Therefore the atom, in its prospective uses, after we have learned how to use it, poses problems which challenge man's ability to live with it. We have studied the atom, have learned its secrets, and now find that if we employ it, in the best methods we know today to achieve the energy the atom can bring to mankind, that we have only succeeded in scaring ourselves to the point that we may not be able to realize the full benefits we see lying ahead.

We can hope—scientists will continue to study—some types of testing will be needed but a definite call exists to limit the scope of the tests and let us all breathe a bit easier.

cover had been lost to the seas. This latter was hastily covered with heavy canvas and we were on our way toward Flores in the Azores, having decided it would be best to get some repairs. The engine had been fouled with salt water, and it was thought best to get it fixed if possible, as it might come in handy when approaching any unfamiliar land and harbors.

Flores where we arrived after twenty-four days at sea, is a most primitive spot, but people there did a fine job in attending to our needs and deserve a real "well done." The natives on the island are most friendly and couldn't do enough for us. We were royally entertained by the President of the Lagens area with a sightseeing tour of the entire island followed by a true native dinner.

We departed Flores around noon of the twenty-sixth day of April and headed for the northwest corner of Spain with La Caruna our objective. The going was fairly uncomfortable at times due to some rain and some heavy seas, but it all seemed mild compared to our earlier experiences. Our Captain was an excellent navigator and all our landfalls were made on the nose. So it was that on May fifth at 1310, it was "Land Ho" and after sailing up the Bay of La Caruna, past the Tower of Hercules and into the Harbor of La Caruna, we were made most welcome when we tied up to the Real Club Nautico de La Caruna. It had been a dreary rainy day so that we were close aboard before sighting the land, but you may be sure that at this point a little rain couldn't dampen our exuberances. We all acquired rooms at the Ambassador Hotel, but before settling down to a state of comfort and ease, all clothing and bedding was removed from the boat so that it might be washed out in fresh water. We had been salted down and wet for days and it is impossible to tell how good the hot baths and fresh bedding felt to us on that night.

Some changes in personnel took place at La Caruna as previously planned. Carter returned home by air, while Wallerstein and Blake went travelling in Spain. We were joined by Mrs. Guckes and the Guckes' daughter Mrs. Richard Krementez who had flown over to cruise some of the coast, Mrs. Guckes journeying to Lisbon and Mrs. Krementez only as far as Vigo where Blake returned on board.

We left La Caruna early May tenth and ran south to the small fishing village of Camarinas some fifty miles south under a nice following wind. The next day broke overcast and cool, and the winds increased as the day progressed, making the run to Muros a bit uncomfortable. On the way our dinghy parted its painter and we had to make several runs at it before being able to pick it up. Muros, another small fishing village, had poor anchorage for a boat like the Malabar II, and we had the anchor up and down many times trying to find holding ground. We thought we were settled for the night but at 0330 were awakened by shouts on shore, and coming on deck found that we had dragged again and were nearly on the beach. After getting the anchor up and into deep water again it was decided our best bet was to cruise about the harbor until daylight at which time we would head south for Vigo, where we planned to stay a few days. The trip to Vigo was rough and windy, but good time was made and by mid-afternoon we were tied up to their Yacht Club and receiving their hospitality. From Vigo we took a trip by car to Santiago and then flew to Madrid for a few days.

Lisbon was our next port of call, and it presented a mild problem as there were no decent harbors along the way except Leixios, the yacht harbor for Oporto, and even from there to Lisbon was more than a day's run. We decided to make plans as we went along, and so left Vigo early on May twenty-fourth. Once out to sea we had as nice going as we had had at any time. We were footing fast and riding with comfort, so that when mid-afternoon found us off Leixios we thought we would keep going in hope of reaching Lisbon before dark of the next day. Our good weather was of short duration and early the next morning we had to shorten sail. Wind and seas increased so that when we rounded the point and started up the Tagus it was really blowing, and of course more accentuated as we had to come up into the blow. Blake and I had all we could handle securing the jib and fore-tough one, I'll tell you. He doesn't hold with anyone who doesn't produce."

From the beginning, here, Dick avoided publicity and sidestepped formal interviews. He gradually met local newsmen and became their friend rather than their copy.

Nor has Arthur ever tooted Dick's horn. He has let him work things out for himself.

"I learned one thing from dad," said Dick. "In this business you're fair game for anyone who wants to take a shot at you. They may not be right, but you're always a target."

What about the future?

"It depends on where the chips fall. If somebody came along and said do the Yankees' games, I'd do 'em—but I haven't the experience.

"I'd still like to be in sales."

When Arthur did his network shows from San Francisco last summer, photographers wanted to take a father-and-son-at-work-together picture, but Arthur said: "I won't do it unless Dick asks me."

Fabulous Session

Dick asked and the session that followed was rather fabulous.

I was on vacation at the time.

"I'm kinda sorry you missed that," said Dick. "It was the best press conference dad ever had. It lasted two hours and it was getting so late we thought we'd have to shoot him down to get him out.

"Of course, I'm prejudiced," he went on, "but I think dad's a mighty fine man."

In San Francisco we think Dick is a mighty fine Godfrey.

and desires. The breadth is the "General Education" part of his college experience. Its foundation is in the required freshman courses, C.C. and English, and it is furthered by the foreign language and the Group A,B,C requirements. These requirements we have reviewed and at the present consider that they are fulfilling their function adequately. The depth is provided by the departmental major and the general examination. Intellectual maturity is one of the most important aims of any liberal education and we believe that the intellectual maturing of a student is furthered by extended study in a field of his own choosing. The general examination then ties this study together and brings the whole field into perspective as the student finishes his college course. In this way more is demanded of the senior in the way of comprehension and synthesis than is asked of the freshman and maturity is developed.

For the same reasons we feel that more should be asked of the freshman than has been expected of him in secondary school. Therefore, as the Committee turned its attention to the program of the freshman year we wished to determine what might be done at this level to promote and stimulate the intellectual development of the student and to challenge him beyond his previous academic experience. The required courses are the backbone of the freshman year and of these the C.C. course came first to our attention. As the Alumni so well know, the course which Professor Heinrichs gave over the last two decades was an enriching and enlightening experience. Professor Heinrich's own personal contacts and experience contributed greatly to the depth and impact of his lectures. However, the course began as and has always been primarily a survey course. Such courses serve many useful purposes but the Committee felt that a change of emphasis to individual problems and to the ideas behind events would provide greater depth and would furnish a rigorous intellectual experience. After many conferences and with the cooperation of the C.C. department, it was recommended to the faculty that the material in the course be organized around selected root aspects of contemporary civilization. Following the adoption of these recommendations, Professor Hoag has been developing a course on this principle and has been organizing the material around the concepts of the state, the individual in the state, and the state in the world community. The reports this year are that the freshmen have reacted very favorably to this contact with ideas and to the opportunity to discuss these ideas in small sections.

Other aspects of the freshman year have also been discussed at length and further recommendations will probably be made to the faculty in the fall. Meanwhile, as mentioned above, problems of the accumulation of excess "D" credits and of the programs and operation of our pre-professional plans have been considered, recommendations have been made to the faculty, and changes in our regulations adopted.

Thus through work on particular problems the Committee has been surveying the total educational experience at Middlebury and clarifying the general objectives which

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE
Alumni Fund

Fellow Alumni, Parents and Friends of Middlebury:

The loyal support of 55.3 percent of living Alumni and Alumnae in contributing to the 1957 Alumni Fund is greatly appreciated by your College. It would be nice if it could be possible to personally thank each Alumni Fund contributor on behalf of the Alumni Fund Committee for their support. Obviously this can't be done so we will have to confine our "thank you" to this medium. Names of contributors to the Alumni Fund are listed with class news on pages 33 to 50.

A high point and a low point is noted in the results of the 1957 Alumni Fund results. First, the high point: 116 more members of the Middlebury family contributed. Secondly, the low point: for the first year since the start of our Annual Giving program we failed to reach our goal. The goal was $55,000.00 and a total of $50,790.79 was contributed.

With the $55,000.00 again set as the goal for next year's Alumni Fund we are faced with the problem of finding a means to reach this goal. The obvious solution is more active interest in the Alumni Fund by the 44.7 percent of the Alumni and Alumnae who did not contribute.

Another great help would be to have the nearly 1000 contributors who mailed in a dollar each to raise their sights a bit. With the value of the dollar shrinking with the passage of each month it can be stretched only so far by the College in its scholarship efforts.

As we look forward to next year's drive please keep in mind that the Alumni Fund is the very cornerstone of the College's Development Program. Walter E. Brooker, '37, Director of the Development Program reminds us that our program of Annual Giving by Alumni, Parents, and Friends creates a "living endowment" in support of the College. The Alumni Fund has made possible sizable gifts amounts to the Development Program and made known to outside sources the high degree of loyal support Middlebury receives from its own people. The fact that the College's Alumni Fund has been one of the leaders in the country in percentage of participation by its Alumni has brought Middlebury increased support from corporations and foundations.

Donald Frederickson, '25 and Margaret Harworth Shuttleworth, '29, National Chairmen for the coming year wish to thank all contributors to the 1957 Fund and urge each and every one of you to contribute to the 1958 Alumni Fund.

sail, after which we let the engine take over, while we headed for the shelter of Cascais Harbor a short ways up the lee shore. It would have been foolhearty to try for Lisbon that night, but by morning the wind had lessened a little and we powered to Lisbon easily under the shelter of the lee shore.

At Lisbon Derek Van Deusen, a Haverford College student, joined us to take Wallerstein's place who had been advised medically not to make the return trip. After putting aboard complete new stores, and topping off with gasoline and water we left Libson on June second and headed southwest for Madeira. We had a nice run to Funchal getting there at noontime of the sixth. We stayed there enjoying its lovely climate until the ninth of May when we took off for Tenerife, some 250 miles to the south, which was also a pleasant run made in good time.

May the eleventh saw us leaving Tenerife in the early morning for Bermuda, the longest leg of our trip. Tenerife with the 14,000 foot snow capped El Teide, plus the remains of a storm up north made our getting away from the island slow and it took a day and a half to get into the trade winds and nice going. We sailed southwest to keep in the "trades" and for a week logged 150 miles or better a day, which is considered good sailing. We went pretty well south and across the Tropic of Cancer before heading north for Bermuda. Most of this stretch was comfortable going except when we were becalmed for several days about 450 miles from our destination. A breeze finally came along and we reached Hamilton around noon of July the eleventh where we were welcomed at the Royal Bermuda Yacht Club.

A fifth member, Archie MacIntosh, joined us in Bermuda for the last leg of our trip to Camden, Maine. We started on this leg June seventeenth and were greeted with rough seas, rain squalls, and in general miserable weather shortly after taking departure from the sea buoy off St. George. Due to the course we had to lay the boat handled as poorly as anytime on the trip. After several days of poor uncomfortable sailing we ran into fog which stayed with us except for the last mile of our trip. We had little to no visibility, and saw nothing of any land whatsoever until we were all but home when a rain squall cleared the atmosphere exposing the Camden hills in back of the harbor along with other objects so familiar to Guckes and myself. It was 1915 when we tied up at the Camden Yacht Club bringing to a close an ocean voyage of some 9,000 miles, a voyage that had shown us a variety of conditions and experiences that make for pleasant reminiscing.

drama department and usually have a faculty director, give similar indication of student ability. The new Theatre, when finished, will serve as both reward and morale booster to this area of endeavor.

These are activities which have been consistently outstanding. There are also individuals who have "done us proud." Every year Middlebury seniors receive an array of awards and scholarships, and our class of 1957 is no exception. A few names and facts will serve to indicate the caliber of students at Middlebury.

Dann Sargent has what is probably the outstanding award, a Rhodes Scholarship for two years of graduate study at Oxford. A Fulbright Scholarship has been granted to Norman Ingham, who will study Russian and Russian history at the Free University of Berlin next year. Jon Shirley has won a scholarship in physics at California Institute of Technology.

The Middlebury College Honor Scholarship to the University of Chicago was won by Donald Sanders and additional University scholarship has been given to Richard Brenner. Both men will study in the School of Business Administration. Donald Small has been awarded a teaching assistantship in mathematics at the University of Kansas.

Seven Middlebury students passed the written half of the foreign service examination last fall. Three are men and four women. The men are James Donahue, Edward Regan and Herbert Weiboldt, and the women are Sandra Nelson, Carlotta Paetow, Joanne Sargent, and Janet von Wettburg ('58). Miss Nelson has also received a scholarship to the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, and Miss Sargent an anonymous fellowship to the Yale University Graduate School of English.

Also on the distaff side, Karen Dooley and Jane Ross have been admitted to the Harvard-Radcliffe program of Business Administration and Sabra Harwood is entered in the new two-year Master of Arts program at Wesleyan University. Mary Ullmann has a teaching fellowship in Spanish at Northwestern University, and Suzanne Lehmann has a research assistantship and tuition scholarship to the University of Rochester.

These are the people we are proud of, and they are part of the reason we like Middlebury. We also like the many others who are bridge partners, or classmates, or friendly faces. People really make a college, and it is the people we will remember.

Alumni Fund Memorials

Classmates, friends or relatives wishing to make memorial gifts in the name of deceased alumni or alumnae may do so through the Alumni Endowment of the Alumni Fund.

Memorial gifts of this nature are added to the Alumni Endowment of the Middlebury Alumni Fund. The income produced by the gift each year will be credited to the Alumni Fund with the annual gifts of members of the designated person's class. Each year, the person in whose memory gifts were made, will be listed with contributors from his or her class.

At present two Alumni Memorials are in existence at Middlebury. They are the Stanley V. Wright Memorial given by friends and alumni with income to be credited to the Class of 1918 and the Helen Harriman Kopke Memorial given by John Kopke '12 with income to be credited to the Class of 1913.

Memorial gifts should be sent to the Alumni Office at Middlebury.

Alumni and friends of Middlebury College may establish continued giving to the Middlebury Alumni Fund by means of a memorial or named gift. The first three Alumni endowment gifts are shown above.

Such a gift makes it possible for a person or a group to establish a living memorial to a classmate, friend, or relative. It may also be used by Alumni who having contributed annually to the College during their lives wish to perpetuate their donations and project their loyal support of the College beyond their lifetime by a bequest or permanent gift.

When memorial gifts of this nature are established, the principal amount of the gift is added to the Alumni Endowment of Middlebury Alumni Fund and identified there with the designated person's class. Income on this principal amount for the remainder of the year during which the gift is received, and in succeeding years, will be credited to the Alumni Fund with other annual gifts of members of the designated person's class. Each year the name of the donor or in the case of a memorial, the person in whose memory the fund was established, will be so listed with contributors from his or her class.

Permanent additions to the above Alumni Endowments may be made by Alumni and friends at any time.

Minneapolis 27, Minn.

Lara Wheaton Prescott (Mrs. J. Palmer) was awarded a Master of Arts degree at the University of Connecticut in June 1956. Word was received in the Alumni Office in April of the death of Dr. Rudolf Leiser, husband of Emeline Freeborn Leiser. James Thomson has completed his fifth year as chairman of the Music department at Wilson College in Chambersburg, Pa.; Mr. Thomson has a Master's degree from Baylor University and one from Yale; he will receive his Ph.D. from New York University next February. His family consists of a son who is attending Lafayette College and three daughters, Jean Ellen, five, Margaret Celia, three, and Vivian Elizabeth, six months. The Thomson family bought a one hundred year old house in Tamworth, N. H. in 1952 for a summer home and are in the process of modernizing it. The Alumni Office received word this spring of the death of Grace Cheney Greene's husband, Kenneth.

James Morrow, research associate at Yale University's Bingham Oceanographic Laboratory, will be chief scientist on the first major deep sea scientific expedition into the Indian Ocean area around the Seychelles Islands this summer. The expedition started about August 1 from Colombo, Ceylon, and will make exploratory stops at the Maldive and Chagos Islands before reaching the Seychelles; in December the party will proceed to Mombasa, Africa where it will officially disband. Dr. Morrow, during the Seychelles exploration, will concentrate on the so-called "bill" fishes, mainly the marlin family, to further studies he has been engaged in for the last decade in that field. Frederic Davis is with the National Carbon Company in Niagara Falls, N. Y.; he is living on Hillview Court in Lewiston, N. Y.

Where Do Great Ideas Come From?

From its beginnings this nation has been guided by great ideas.

The men who hammered out the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were thinkers—men of vision—the best educated men of their day. And every major advance in our civilization since that time has come from minds equipped by education to create great ideas and put them into action.

So, at the very core of our progress is the college classroom. It is there that the imagination of young men and women gains the intellectual discipline that turns it to useful thinking. It is there that the great ideas of the future will be born.

That is why the present tasks of our colleges and universities are of vital concern to every American. These institutions are doing their utmost to raise their teaching standards, to meet the steadily rising pressure for enrollment, and provide the healthy educational climate in which great ideas may flourish.

They need the help of all who love freedom, all who hope for continued progress in science, in statesmanship, in the better things of life. And they need it now!
